GOVERNMENT OF INDIA

ARCHÆOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA

CENTRAL ARCHÆOLOGICAL LIBRARY

ACCESSION NO 8187
.ALL No. 294-6 / Aiy

D.G.A. 79

The Adyar Library Series-No. 27

RAJADHARMA

Printed by C. Subbarayudu, AT THE VASANTA PRESS, ADYAR, MADRAS

RĀJADHARMA

(Dewan Bahadur K. Krishnaswami Row Lectures, University of Madras)

ВУ

K. V. RANGASWAMI AIYANGAR

Honorary Professor of Economics, Benares Hindu University

8187

294.6 Aiy

CENTRAL ARCHAEOLOGIGA LIBRARY, NEW DELHI. Acc. No. $187 Date. 15-1-57.

Ain

$\mathbf{T}O$

DHARMĀTMĀ PANDIT MADAN MOHAN MALAVIYAJI IN VENERATION AND AFFECTION

		-
		• ,
•
-		:
		;
		,
	u
		,
		,
		,
		;

PREFATORY NOTE

In the scheme of work outlined for the Library is the publication of a number of unpublished Dharmas astra works, whose importance and rarity justify their inclusion in the Adyar Library Series. An important Digest of Hindu Law of the so-called "South India School," the Vyavahāranirnaya, which is older than the famous Parasara-Madhaviya, and probably older than the Smrticandrika of Devanna Bhatta, is ready for release as one of our Series. Another work which is on the anvil is the Kesava-Vaijayantī the famous bhāsya on the ancient Visnusmrti. Both these are being edited by Rao Bahadur, Professor K. V. Rangaswami Aiyangar, Vidyavacaspati, Dharmyarths'astraratnākara, whose pioneer works on Ancient Indian Polity and Economic Thought are well-known to students of Hindu social institutions. He has now completed for another well-known series a reconstruction of the long-lost law-book of Brhaspati, after many years of strenuous investigation. We are promised in the same series under his editorship, the first five volumes of Laksmīdhara's Kṛtva-Kalþataru, the oldest extant digest of Dharmas'āstra and they are to be followed by the remaining nine volumes of this great dharmanibandha. These undertakings are the result of studies pursued by Professor Rangaswami Aiyangar in the scanty leisure of a busy official life.

By a fortunate circumstance, he selected as the theme of his lectures in the Dewan Bahadur K. Krishnaswami Row Foundation of the University of Madras some important aspects of Dharmas'āstra. To these lectures, which were delivered in 1937, he gave the title of Rajadharma. The title might suggest one more study of ancient Indian polity, a subject which has had a great vogue in Indian and Foreign universities since the publication of the Arthasastra of Kautilya in 1909. In reality it is a prolegomena to Dharmastastra in which, among other matters, the inter-relations and canonical validity of both Arthas astra and Dharmas'astra are explained and elucidated. In the early British Indian judicial administration the study of Dharmas'āstra had an attraction to lawyers and orientalists, which has steadily waned with the growth of Indian case-law and its supersession of smrti law. Its popularity has now gone to Arthas'astra. The two are now usually regarded as rivals and not as complementing each other. Academic criticism professes to see in them differences of aim, outlook, method and origin. It is significant, as pointed out in one of his 'Notes' by Professor Rangaswami Aiyangar, that even living repositories of traditional Sanskrit scholarship silently acquiesce in the view that Arthasastra is a body of secular knowledge, and on that hypothesis deduce a conclusion of its inferior authority as compared with Dharmas'astra.

Such a view is one of many instances of the obscuration, even to paṇḍits of our day, of correct positions in regard to those two sastras. Scholars whose approach to these has been in a spirit of contempt for traditional methods of study, and who, in violation of the spirit of the historic method, which they profess to follow, omit to take note of the mental and spiritual background of Hindu social thought, carry the process of obscuration further. We encounter accordingly in modern studies of ancient Hindu society a mass of doctrine for which scientific validity is claimed and conceded on grounds which a more balanced study might challenge.

A familiar instance of the trend is to be seen in the usual acceptance of Rajadharma as state-craft in the narrow sense in which it seems conceived by writers like Kamandaka. The traditional conception of the term equated it with the whole corpus of Dharma. In the epic, when in answer to an interlocutor, a sage begins to expound Rajadharma, he deals not with constitutional and political matters alone but with the whole of Dharma. Seen in this perspective many conclusions which are now readily accepted in regard to our social thought will need revision. Professor Rangaswami Aiyangar has deliberately chosen the challenging title to draw attention to the patent harm done by omitting to recognise this traditional view. He illustrated the point by citing many instances when he delivered the lectures now published. These have now been amplified and expanded so as to furnish to the reader adequate material for judging of the validity of the positions taken by the lecturer, and are embodied in a series of very condensed essays or articles, amounting to more than a hundred-and-eighty, which are modestly designated as 'Notes.' Even a cursory perusal of their titles in the list of contents will disclose their importance as well as their range, variety and interest. The 'Notes' form as important a part of the book as the text. Attention may be drawn also to the classified index, which may be useful to students. It is the work of a member of our staff, Mr. A. N. Krishna Aiyangar, M.A., L.T., Joint Editor of our Bulletin.

The scheme of publication which the Adyar Library has laid down provides for the publication of lectures like those now introduced. Our obligation to Professor Rangaswami Aiyangar, who has so freely been collaborating with us, is all the greater since he has given the Adyar Library all rights both in the lectures on Rajadharma now published and in other works which he is editing for the Library. To meet the convenience of readers of Sanskrit unfamiliar with Nagarī script, he has given at considerable labour the many Sanskrit texts he has cited in the 'Notes' in Roman. It is hoped that this will enable a larger body of readers to examine the citations than would be possible if Nagarī had been employed for their presentation.

The Adyar Library
1st July, 1941

G. SRINIVASA MURTI,

Honorary Director

PREFACE

In the renaissance of Indian studies, which is a feature of our day, a branch which has not come to its own is Dharmas'āstra. Even among its special students divergent views as to its character, scope, content, source, authority and affiliations are not uncommon. This is due neither to lack of material nor to lack of intensive study. Though only a small fraction of the vast literature of Dharmas'āstra has been printed and a still smaller fraction is available in translations, virtually all the great commentaries and digests that have survived eight centuries of alien and frequently hostile rule, are now available in one or other of our great manuscript collections.

Dharmasastra was a living subject down to the threshold of the nineteenth century. It was assiduously cultivated at the great centres of Hindu learning and digests were written as late as the accession of Queen Victoria. For a generation or two afterwards, proximate utility drew lawyers and judges to the intensive study of one section of it, viz. vyavahāra. A mild interest has since then been evinced by students of ritual in the other two sections, viz., ācāra and prāyasccitta.

Legalist enthusiasm for Dharmasāstra rapidly waned with the growth of case-law and the ever-widening rift between the traditional Hindu law and the judge-made law of the British Indian courts. If and when the proposal under consideration to codify Hindu Law (on the basis obviously of judicial decisions and reformist advocacy) becomes fait accompli, the little interest which survives among professional men will vanish completely.

The contingency need not, however, cause misgiving. Vyavahāra doctrines have suffered greatly from specious reasoning and distortion in the interest of litigants and from their pursuit in the twilight of halfknowledge. If Dharmas'astra continues to hold an attraction, it will be chiefly to students of history, who will turn to it for the light it will throw on the institutions and ideals, the life and thought of an age remote from their own. It will also count as a disciplinary study in the Universities. Its liability to distortion will not disappear altogether. To read the present into the past is a foible to which historians are liable. The political use of history consists in the past forming an arsenal from which weapons for present strife may be drawn. History is not immune from interested falsification or from erroneous conclusions due to religious or political bias. These risks will have to be faced by Dharmas'astra also. But, as in the case of history, the margin of error can be reduced by the diffusion of high ideals of truth and accuracy and. as in the physical sciences which use laboratory methods of investigation, by the provision of safeguards or 'controls.'

PREFACE xiii

An aim of the lectures now printed was to evoke and stimulate interest in a branch of study which was regarded for ages as of paramount importance for the upkeep of the social order. Other aims were to illustrate its use to the student of Indian history and sociology, to define its position among kindred studies, and to vindicate the value of the traditional method of approach to it, the neglect of which has been the fertile source of numerous dubious conclusions now in circulation. An attempt was also made to demonstrate by examples the importance of securing, as a condition precedent to its study, a correct perception of the philosophic background of Hindu life and thought. Sir Henry Maine, whose masterly studies of Roman and Celtic law, vindicated the value of the historic method, made many plausible and invalid generalisations when he dealt with Hindu jurisprudence. His errors sprang not from any defect of the historic method but from his conspicuous drift from that method in the case of Hindu Law, when he read into its authors motives and purposes as well as beliefs of his day, and showed inability to avoid bias due to a sense of racial and religious superiority. It is natural but regrettable that the authority justly attaching to his name is still securing the currency of many erratic views for which justification will be difficult to find. It is still more a matter for regret that with far less excuse than Maine, who wrote from a cursory perusal of English translations of a few smṛtis and digests and without access in the originals to the major digests, commentaries and smṛtis, modern writers, who enjoy these advantages, repeat or add to Maine's erroneous statements. Few modern books on Hindu ethics, for instance, are free, whether composed in a spirit of apology or appreciation or of hostile criticism, from statements which wider knowledge of Dharmas'āstra and its study, not apart from but side by side with cognate subjects, might have prevented. In the Hindu view of life, aims, ideals and activities were not divided up and considered as independent of one another. There was no distinction between things secular and things religious: the distinction would have been unintelligible to the ancient Hindu. Society was viewed as indivisible, except for distribution of duties and obligations. On the equipoise of duties duly discharged, whether of individuals, classes or functionaries, was held to depend the harmony not only of a particular state or community but of the entire universe. Life was a continuum, not interrupted by death, and so were deed and thought. With such beliefs, to look into only one specialised subject like Arthasastra or Dharmasastra, for a final interpretation of the meaning of any rule of life or institution, was to ask to be misled. This is why error pursues the heels of one who would study a section of Dharmas'astra (e.g., vyavahara) to the exclusion of the others, or study Dharmas astra and Arthas astra apart and as if they were not cognate and interdependant. Specialisation has its limitations. We might acquire knowledge of the histology and anatomy of Hindu society, and miss all knowledge of its physiology and psychology.

In earlier studies, some of which go back to 1914, it was my endeavour to indicate some of the devices which the traditional method of education and transmission of knowledge from generation to generation in the "bookless ages," provided for a correct comprehension of the Hindu ideals of life. The present lectures illustrate the uses of the traditional approach to the study of Dharmas'āstra and Arthas'āstra, and the unwisdom of ignoring or rejecting, in the special conditions in which Indian learning was conserved, valuable oral tradition and its late record in books.

The designation of lectures on some aspects of Dharmas'astra as Rajadharma requires in the conditions of our day an explanation which would have been superfluous to the old Hindu. Today we, under the obsessions of political studies, regard Rajadharma as king-craft or polity. This meaning was not unknown in the past but the wider sense of the term was in general use. The distinction involves what may be regarded as a "constitutional" issue. Among personal and functional obligations those which lay upon the head of society (e.g., Raja) hinged round his duty to maintain each person in his duty or Dharma. The king's Dharma, Rajadharma, was thus the sum of the knowledge of all particular duties, i.e. the whole Dharma, Dharmas astra. The new knowledge springing from the Arthasastra has been used to support views which reverse the relations of the ancient Hindu king and his society. The wider sense of the term would have automatically corrected the tendency were it understood. The idea was so familiar to the old-time Hindu that it entered into the fabric of ordinary literature. For instance, addressing Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa is made by Bhavabhūti to say:

"Dharmaprakṛṣyamāṇo vā goptā Dharmasya vā bhavañ"

(Mahāvīracarita, V, s/1. 30)

The king is the subject as well as the protector of Dharma.

The form of a lecture precludes the inclusion of citations of authority. The lectures now printed contain on every page statements which run counter to received opinion. During oral delivery such explanations as seemed from the nature of the audience to be called for were given on the spot. When the lectures are printed and addressed to a wider circle, it has become necessary to supply the material on which readers might judge for themselves of the validity of the reasoning or conclusions advanced in the lectures, instead of accepting them without examination. The need is met by the addition of the "Notes" at the end of the lectures (pp. 66-216). I have endeavoured to keep down their number and to condense them as far as possible consistently with clearness. In several 'Notes' the argument has been developed and carried a stage further than in the text. For understanding the points of view of the lectures the 'Notes' are very necessary. It is hoped that they will prove of interest and of some use to students of Dharmas'āstra.

The lectures were composed for oral delivery early in 1938. The University of Madras had no funds for their publication. I am indebted to the authorities of the Adyar Library and particularly to its erudite Director, Vaidyaratna, Captain G. Srinivasamurti for not only taking over the publication first through the Bulletin of the Library and then independently, but for the freedom given me in regard to the number and length of the 'Notes.' I am also indebted to the Joint Editor of the Brahmavidva. Mr. A. N. Krishna Aiyangar, M.A., L. T., for seeing the book through the press and for providing an index of unusual fulness and clarity. My obligation is great to Mr. C. Subbarayudu, the Manager of the Vasanta Press, for his patience in overlooking the submission of numerous proofs, necessitated by the use, for the convenience of readers in Europe and America, of diacritically marked Roman type for passages in Sanskrit, and for the care with which the work has been done.

The printing of the book was begun in May 1939. As both Mr. Krishna Aiyangar and I became soon after engrossed in the task of organising an Oriental Institute at Tirupati and continued in the work till September 1940, a long interval between the commencement and the completion of the printing has become unavoidable.

Vasumativilās,

Rangachari Road, Mylapore, 5th July, 1941 K. V. RANGASWAMI

CONTENTS

								P	AGE
DEDI	CATION								v
PREF	fatory N	OTE		•		•	•		vii
PREF	FACE						•		хi
LECT	CURE I	•		•		•	•		1
LECT	TURE II		•	•	•	. •	•	•	33
Noti	Es:			•		,	,		•
1.	Study of	Ancier	nt Indi	ian Cultu	ire				67
2.	Rājadha	rma		•					67
3.	The Lec	turer's	Work	s.		•	:		68
4.	Use of the	he Kau	tiliya	in Mode	n Po	litics			68
5.	Dharmas	s'āstra a	as Prie	estly Tw	addle	•	•		68
6.	Small C	ontent	of La	w and I	Polity	in Dhar	mas/āstra			•			•		70
7.	Halhed's	s Code					•	•	71
8.	Colebroo	ke's D	igest			••	•	•	71
9.	Early E	English	Tran	slations	of D	harmas'â	istra		1
	and W	orks or	1 Hind	lu Law		•	,		72
10.	Jimutava	āhana's	Inter	est in No	on-Vy	vavahāra			73
11.	Mādhav	ācārya?	s Kāld	aviveka	or Kā	lanirņa	yα	•	73
12.	Mixture	of Spi	iritual	and Sec	ular :	Punishm	ents
	in the	Hindu	Crimi	nal Code		• •	* *	•	74
13.	Brāhmar	ņa Imn	unitie	es .		•	1.0	•	7 5.
14.	Alleged	Secular	Natu	re of Ar	thas'ā	stra		•	76

			P	AGE
15.	Toleration of Heresy and Heterodoxy .			77
16.	Differentiation between Secular and Religion	ıs
	Law			78
17.	Divinity of Punishment or Danda .			80)
18.	Vedic Basis of Hindu Law			80
19,	Doctrine of Option (Vikalpa)			81
20.	Conflicts of Law not Real			82
21.	Schools of Arthas'āstra		•'	83
22.	Application of Mimāmsa to Dharmas'āstra an	d
	Arthas'āstra			84
23.	Arthas'āstra core of Smṛtis			84
24.	Brahmanical Reaction from the First Centur	У
	A.D. favours Dharmas'āstra			84
25.	Kāmandaka's Nītisāra			85
26.	Sutra form of Composition			86
27.	Formal Public Recitations of Sutras .			86
28.	Lost Smṛti-bhāsyas			86
29.	Distance of time between Smrtis and Commer	1-
	taries			87
3 0.	Kauṭilya's own Bhāṣya on the Arthas āstra			87
31.	Mādhava's Treatment of Vyavahāra and Rāja	i-
	dharma			87
32.	Recent Bhāsyas and Nibhandhas .	•		88
33.	Non-inclusion of Yājñavalkyasmṛti in "Th	е
	Sacred books of the East" .			88
34.	Attitude of Indian Courts to Dharmas'āstra			89
35.	Colebrooke's Study of Mīmāmsa .			89
36.	Allegation of Priestly influence on Hindu Lav	V		90
37.	S'abara's Modernity in Criticism .			90
38.	Kautilya and his Guru			91
39.	Criticised views on the nature of Dharmas'āstr	a		91
Ю.	Jayaswal's views of the Difference between	n ·
	Arthas'āstra, Dharmas'āstra and Rājanīti		,	92
-1.	The way of the Mahajana the path of Dharm	á		. 93

	CONTENTS			xxi
			P	AGE
.42.	Connotation of Dharma			93
43.	Classifications of Dharma			94
44.	Dharma comprehends all knowledge .			94
45.	The Vidyāsthānas or Dharmasthānas	. 1		95
46.	The Krtya-Kalapataru	•		95
47.	Omission of Rājadharma and Vyavahāra	in
	Digests			96
48.	Sections omitted in the Ratnākara by Car	ņ-		06
	des'vara	•	•	96
49.	The Hypotheses of Mimāmsa .	•	•	96
50.	Consideration of apparent conflicts of Author	r-		0.0
	ities	•	•	96
51.	Alleged rule of Kālikā-Purāna on the adoption	on		, .
	of a boy who has had Samskāras .	•	•	98
52.	Judges and Assessors to be trained lawyers	•	•	98
53.	Parișad	•	•	99
54.	Vastness of Dharmas'āstra Literature .	•	•	100
55.	Dharmas'āstra activity in the middle of Civ	vil
	Troubles	•	٠	101
56.	Idea of union of interest between King and Su	b-
	ject · · · ·	•	•	10 1
57.	King and Danda divinely created	•	•	102
58.	Horror of Anarchy	•	• 	102
59.	Influence of good Government on the Seasons	•	•	102
60.	Rājā Kālasya Kāraņam	•	٠	102
61.	Rāmarājya	•	•	105
62.	Kārta-vīryārjuna	•	•	105
63.	Rāma as the Restorer of the Golden Age in Tr	etā-Yug	a	106
64.	Expulsion or execution of an evil Ruler	•		106
65.	Taxes are the King's Wages			107
66.	King's freedom ends with Coronation .	•		107
67.	Vişnu resides in Subject as in King .	•		108
68.	The King's duty to know Dharma	•		108
69	Unhappiness is due to error in Government			108

	٠	٠
$\mathbf{x}\mathbf{x}$	1	1

RĀJADHARMA

		FAGE
70.	Adjustment of Dharma to capacity	109
71.	Adjustment of law to changing society	109
72.	Absence of the influence of legal fictions in Hindu
	Dharma	110
73.	Conservatism not characteristic of earlier, and liberal views of later Smartas	111
74.	Schools of Dharmas'āstra	112
75.	Kauṭilya and Manu on the authority of Nyāya .	113
76.	Customary law systematised, recorded and applied .	114
77.	Recommendation of faith in God in preference to sacrifices, etc	115
78.	Gifts $(D\bar{a}na)$ preferred	115
79.	Authoritativeness of a Smrti due to its own merit .	116
80.	Smrtis endless; Recognition of a modern smrti
	(Medhātithi)	116
81.	The Doctrine of Representation (Pratinidhitvam) .	118
82.	Condemnation of S'udra mendicancy and celibacy .	122
83.	Magnification of the Brāhmaṇa	122
84.	Performance of As'vameda by Kings of dubious caste.	122
85.	Samudragupta's relation to an outcaste clan	123
86.	Heliodorus the Vaiṣṇava Greek	124
87.	The Huns as worshippers of Visnu	124
88.	The effects of the spread of Mimāmsa on Buddhism .	125
89.	S'ankara's influence in the Disappearance of Buddhism	127
90.	Devala's claim to supersede other smrtis	128
91.	Digests under Royal authorship or patronage	129
92.	Dharmas'āstra in the Musalman period	129
93.	Dvaita-nirnaya	130
94.	The substitutes for the Parişad in Dharma-vyavasthã	131
95.	Medhātithi's repudiation of the King's power to make a law in transgression of Dharma	131
96.	King's alleged power to make laws, of his own authority	132
97.	Power of the King to change law or usage. The alleged case of As'oka	135

	CONTENTS	,		XXIII
]	PAGE
98.	Alleged change by the Mauryas in the law of			135
99.	Respite from sentence for three days in th	e case	of prisoners sentenced to death	•		136
100.	Royal pardon			137
101.	Prohibition of Vedic sacrifices	•		138
102.	Brūṇahatyā			139
103.	As'oka's Dhamma viewed as Brahmanical			139
104.	Dharmavijaya	•		140
105.	Dharma-Amātya same as Dharmādhikārī	•		143
106.	Title of Dharma Mahā-Rāja in the Pallava I	ynastie	es.	143
107.	Kadamba title of Dharma-Mahārāja .		•	144
108.	Gangas as Dharma-Mahārājas	•		145
109.	Title of Dharma-Mahārāja in Campā .	•		145
110.	Cola claim to follow Manu's lead .			.145
111.	Kālidāsa on Manu's ideal			146
112.	Evils of Anarchy (Arājatā)		٠	146
113.	Aspects of Barbarian rule in India .			147
114.	Removing the taint of Kali (Kali-rajah)	•		148
115.	Education of Princes			148
116.	Increasing Dependence on Customary Law			148
117.	Equal validity of all texts			150
118.	Anonymous texts			152
119.	Justice and good conscience	•		152
120.	Insight or Intuition (Yukti)			153
121.	Acceptance of the usages of Pratiloma castes			154
122.	The usages of the good S'ūdra		٠.	155
123.	Supersession of S'iştācāra by Sādhūnam-Ācār	a		156
124.	Animus against the learned S'ūdra .			158
125.	Limits of Āryāvarta	•		159
126.	Āpad-Dharma			161
127.	Voyages and visits to prohibited Areas			162
128.	Relaxations of Yuga-Dharma			163
129.	Relaxation of duties for S'ūdras and women		•	164
130.	Upanayana for Women	_	-	165

RĀJADHARMA

			PAGE
131	. Reduction of stringency of rules of Taint .		. 166
132	Relaxation of rule for Age, Infirmity etc.		. 167
133	Struggles of Bhakti-Mārga Adherents with Smārtas		168
134.	Emancipation of individual earnings from family co	n-
	trol and joint-ownership		168
135.	Reduction in the number of valid marriages .		169
136.	Adoption		170
137.	Status of Women (General)		171
138.	Workhouses for destitute women		171
139.	Wife shares in Husband's Punya		171
140.	Brhaspati on the rights of the Wife		172
141.	Right of unmarried daughter to expenses of marriage		173
142.	Marriage an obligation to woman	٠	174
143.	Alleged Buddhist influences in securing Sex equality		175
144.	Indissolubility of marriage		175
145.	Condemnation of prolonged celibacy		176
146.	Praise of Grhasthas rama		178
147.	The widow's power of Alienation		178
148.	Divorce open to Non-Brāhmanas .		180
149.	Kalivarjya		181
150.	Candragupta's marriage to his brother's widow		183
151.	Gradual disappearance of Niyoga	-	184
152.	Prohibition of hypergamous unions	•	185
153.	Growth of belief in magical practices		185
154.	Sati or Sahamarana or Anvārohana	•	186
155.	Treatment of unchaste and abducted or outraged	1	-00
	women	_	189
156.	Rehabilitation of abducted or outraged women.	•	192
157.	Al-Biruni on Hindu treatment of fallen women and		*24
4 2	returned converts	•	193
158.	Rehabilitation of the converted Hindu .	•	194
159.	Treatment of Vrātya; Sivāji's expiation and coronation	•	195
160.	Vrātyastoma .		196
161.	As'vamedha by Kings of dubious Ksatriya lineage	•	197

	CONTENTS				xxv
					PAGE
162.	Nibandhas on Dharmas'āstra by Kings	•			199
163.	Hemādri's Caturvargacintāmaņi				199
164.	Jayasimhakalpadruma .				199
165.	Small content of politics and law in Ni	ibandha	s writt	en
	by command	•			. 200
166.	The character of Rajaniti in Nibandha	literatu	ıre		200
167.	Kauṭilya's Arthas āstra .				201
168.	Bhoja's Yuktikalpataru .				201
169.	Mānasollāsa of Somes'vara Cālukya				201
170.	Kāmandaka, Somadeva-Sūri and Hema	ıcandra			202
171.	Rājadharma works by Court Paṇḍits	•			202
172.	Lakṣmidhara and the Kṛtyakalpataru	•			203
173.	Caṇḍes'vara		•		204
174.	$N \bar{\imath} t i m a y \bar{\imath} \bar{\imath} k h a$	•	•		204
175.	Non-Kṣatriya coronation .	•			205
176.	Killing a Brāhman in self-defence				205
177.	$K\overline{u}$ ta-Yuddha				208
178.	Anantadeva's doctrines .	•	•		208
179.	Mitramis'ra's views				208
180.	Candesvara and Laksmidara .				210
181.	King's propitiation of Unseen Powers		•		211
182.	Caste of Candesvara's master—the Br	āhmaņa	l.
	as King				211
183.	Recognition of the King de facto .				213
184.	The State's obligations to the Poor .				213
185.	Burke's definition of Society		•		213
186.	Divinity of the People (Prajāḥ) .				214
187.	Composition of the $R\bar{a}jan\bar{\imath}ti$ -ratn $\bar{a}kara$	by Roya	al
	command			•	215
188.	Principle of substitution (Pratinidhitvan	m) .		•	215
189.	A woman's independent right to perform	a sacrifice			•	216

CONTENTS

ERRATA

Page	Line
69	4	Read	contempt	for	comtempt
104	33	,,	initiated by the	,,	initiated the
107	19	,,	$Catus$'s' at ītī $kar{a}$,,	Catus's'atīkākā
113	13	,,	Nyāyastatra	,,	Nyayāstatra
152	16	,,	But	,,	Bur
163	25	,,	S'loka Āpastamba	,,	S'loka Āpatamba
165	10	,,	$Sadyovadhar{u}h$,,	Sadhyovadh $ar{u}$ h
	14	,,	Upanayana	, ,,	Upananayana
174	16	,,	Taittirīyá	"	Taittrīya
196	9	,,	Ghosh	,,	Ghose
200	31	••	Laksmīdhara	,,	Laksmīdharma

• • • 3 •

RĀJADHARMA

(DEWAN BAHADUR K. KRISHNASWAMI ROW LECTURES)¹

T

A FEW months ago I received an invitation from the Syndicate of the University of Madras inviting me to give the initial lectures on a foundation bearing the name of the late Dewan Bahadur K. Krishnaswami Row. The lectures were to be based on personal investigations, and to bear on ancient Indian culture. My hands were then quite full with work. The distance between Kāsvī and Madras, and the difficulty of getting away from the University, in which it is now my privilege to serve, in a period full of work, tended to add to my reluctance. But it was overcome on three considerations. The desire of one's alma mater is, in the Hindu sense, alanghanīya—not to be set aside; the gentleman, whose name was borne by the lectureship was one for whom I had come to entertain affection and veneration; and the foundation seemed to be the first in the University, definitely marked for the advancement of a knowledge of ancient Indian culture, a subject which had yet to come to its own in Indian Universities. At present there is only one university in India—that at Benares -in which it is possible for a student to take a degree after a full course in this important branch. When teaching and Delivered on the 4th and 5th March, 1938.

research were accepted some years ago as primary obligations by the transformed provincial universities of India, a provision was made for the study of Indian history and archæology in a few of them. In Madras, where even the retention of the study of the history of the mother-country as one of several subjects forming an optional group, in the degree course, was secured only after long struggles, the first chair to be instituted was that of Indian History and Archæology, now limited by a convention to South India. Valuable additions have been made by instructors and research pupils to many branches of Indian history, political and cultural. But they have been due to the wide extension given by teachers to the scope of their duties. For instance, some recent additions to the literature of Indian polity and social structure have been made in the University of Bombay in the School of Sociology. With the exception of my colleague in Benares 1 who presides with distinction over our department of Ancient Indian History and Culture, only one other university professor in India-the Carmichæl Professor in Calcutta University—derives his designation from this branch. But, in Calcutta there is no provision for the group in the ordinary and honours courses leading to the B.A. degree, though it can be offered by a candidate for the M.A. degree. In the University of Bombay a candidate can indeed offer it in the M.A. examination, but the provision is infructuous as neither the University nor the constituent Colleges offer any help to students in securing the antecedent knowledge, or provide post-graduate teaching in it. In the Benares Hindu University alone has the vision of its founders and supporters made, from its beginning, provision in all the degree courses for the teaching of ancient Indian history including the history of Indian literature, art, religion, and social and political institutions. The involuntary self-denial of so many Universities of India in this respect has not contributed to a correct perception of many present-day problems, which like most questions of the day, have their roots in the past. It is the feeling that it would not be right to refuse co-operation in any effort to revive the study of this important branch of study that has been the most powerful force impelling me to accept the invitation, in response to which it is my privilege to address today an audience in my old University. I trust that it will not be regarded as presumptuous, or as an abuse of hospitality, if I venture to express the hope that in the many admirable developments which are now taking place in a University, which can claim to be the mother of four other universities, provision will be made, hereafter atleast, for the adequate and continuous study of Indian culture in every stage of the courses of study leading to the M.A. degree.

Dr. A. S. Altekar M.A., LL.B., D.Litt.

It is now some years since Mr. Krishnaswami Row passed away.¹ His work was done in fields which do not come much into public view. His career was remarkable. Born in 1845, he turned to the study of English after a course of vernacular education, and passed the Matriculation examination in 1864 from the Presidency College. He had not the advantage of College education. But, when he had attained eminence, he was nominated a member of the University Senate and held the position for many years. He began his long official career as a clerk in the district court of an out-station. Without academic training in law, he rose to the position of a subordinate judge in Madras and of the chief judge in Travancore, and won a name as a very sound lawyer and judge. After holding the highest judicial office in Travancore for over fifteen years, he was placed at the head of its administration by the Maharaja, a shrewd judge of men, devoted to the interests of his subjects. He held the office of Dewan with distinction for over the full term of five years. After his retirement in 1904, and till almost the last day of his life he took part in the chief public movements of the province. He was thorough in whatever he did. The reputation for efficiency, acuteness, balance and integrity, which he made even when he stood on the lower rungs of the official ladder, he kept through out a long life. He was firmly rooted in a belief in the verities of his ancestral religion and dharma, and was inflexible in his adherence to them. know him was to respect him. The commemoration of his name in a University, in which as a student he stood outside the portals, is a fitting recognition of a life devoted to culture and service. It is an honour to be brought into association with anything which bears his name.

¹ February, 1923.

"Indian culture," even when limited by the adjective "ancient," is a term of Atlantean extension. The wealth of themes in so wide a range is an embarrassment to one who has to make an initial choice, and perhaps to start a tradition. The selection of "Rājadharma," in the wide sense in which it is accepted in Indian tradition, is due, among other considerations to the desire to round off a series of studies, which were begun by me thirty years ago, and which have been pursued in moments of leisure snatched from daily avocation. In 1914 when I was honoured with an invitation like the present, to give the inaugural lecture on the foundation named after Dr. S. Subrahmanya Aiyar, the most venerated Indian of the day in our province, I gave the first fruits of studies of ancient Indian polity. The attempt partook the character of a pioneer enterprise, as the locus classicus for all study of Indian polity, namely the Arthasāstra of Kautilya had been published only five years previously inspite of its existence having been suspected very much earlier by Weber and Aufrecht. I next turned to ancient Indian economic theory and practice and gave the results of my study of them in ordinary lectures delivered before the University, and later on under the Manindra Foundation in the Benares Hindu University. When my official harness was shed in 1934, an invitation from the University of Calcutta to be a Special Reader enabled me to follow up the implications of our wide literature of Arthas'āstra and Dharmas'āstra on the social and schematic side. It is my purpose today to submit some reflections on the character, scope, progress and content of the Indian literature of Dharma as a prolegomenon to the study of an important branch of literature, which has influenced for centuries the life of the people of India, and whose force is still not spent. Many of the opinions to which expression is now given have been formed in the course of an examination of cardinal works in this branch which I am editing. It might be useful if it is made clear at the very beginning, that the aim of the lectures is not to attempt another resume of Indian political theory. The subject is worked out and there is little that one can hope to add to the data already collected. A stray interpretation, that may be new, will not justify a mere summary of accessible information. The source literature of ancient Indian polity is not large, judged by what has survived. Kautilya's book towers over the rest like a Himalayan peak. The works of Kamandaka, Somadeva, Hemacandra, Bhoja and Somesvara, along with the dubious works bearing famous 'epic' names like those of the opposed sages, Bṛhaspati and S'ukra, and Vais'ampāyana, virtually exhaust the number. Every inch of this small field has been subjected to the investigator's spade. He who aspires hereafter to add to our knowledge must discover another Kauṭi-līya. The prospect is not hopeful.

The subject has, however, attained remarkable popularity. The feeling which the Arthasāstra created at first was a mixture of admiration and consternation. A tendency arose to view the old pun in the name 'Kautilya,' as fitly describing the author of unethical and tortuous policies. More thorough study of the Arthasastra in relation to its environment changed the earlier view. Kautilya's memory was then not only vindicated; he had a narrow escape from political canonisation. He has been gravely cited in legislative bodies, state papers and discussions of public' policy, and his authority has been invoked-not always in defence of "emergency finance" or the necessity of espionage. The Arthasāstra has been translated into several languages and is not regarded as needing to be bowdlerised before it can be prescribed for academic study. The exhumation of the old unsavoury reputation is now barred. It is res judicata. The innocuous "Kautalya" is now welcomed as the correct form of his name, and it has replaced the suggestive "Kautilya". The Arthasāstra has the merit of being self-contained, and of exhibiting the working of a master-mind, like Aristotle's. To the statesman and administrator, it holds a different attraction. Its opinions have entered into the fibre of Indian political thought and life. The statesman, like the physician, believes in inherited tolerance to certain remedies, and selects only those which the system will not reject. Institutions and ideas are more readily accepted and assimilated when they fit in with inherited aptitude and tradition than otherwise. The doctrine of the unity and continuity of history gains from the belief that the past survives in the present, like the immortal protoplasm. It offers a fresh inducement to the study of institutional and cultural origins. Reformers, who have to contend against mass inertia or opposition, are strengthened by the discovery of an ancient ancestry for their ideas. Though the sources of ancient Indian polity have been worked threadbare, they will continue to attract men of affairs so long as there is belief in their utility.

This might please those who take a pride in national literature, but the satisfaction will not be un-alloyed. a proper comprehension of our ancient life and thought not only Arthasastra but the bigger literature of Dharmas'āstra is needed. The former has been examined pretty thoroughly. The latter still awaits close study. The tendency has grown to view Dharmas'āstra as subsidiary to Arthasāstra, and indiscriminate use has been made of citations from the former to support or to confirm the doctrines of the latter, and this has been frequently done without reference to context. The attitude reverses the traditional view of the relative position of the two. Barring the sections styled Rājanīti or Rājadharma in the Epics and Purāņas, as well as in the Smrtis, which are regarded of value on account of their political content, and the sections which deal with the principles and rules governing the law of persons and property (vyavahāra), Dharmas'āstra are rejected or ignored as 'priestly twaddle:' But, politics and civil law form by no means the whole or even the major part of Dharmasastra; nor were they regarded by old writers of acumen, possessing a sense of proportion and reality, as the most important. Otherwise, there is no meaning in writers, who display a subtlety and robustness of mind comparable to that of the best lawyers of our age or any other (e.g. Vijňanesvara, Lakṣmīdhara, Jīmūtavāhana, or Mādhava or Raghunandana) spending themselves on the elaboration of the parts of Dharmasāstra, which are now rejected as useless.

This selective or differential treatment is largely the result of a historical accident. The early British administrators suddenly found their desks in the counting houses turned into the chairs of judges and magistrates. They had to govern people who were governed by personal laws, set forth in treatises written in languages which Europeans did not understand. The penal law, of the country, except in small islands of Hindu government, not submerged in the Muhammadan inundation, was Muhammadan and was based on the Koran and traditions. Warren Hastings, who had no compunction in enforcing a law which made forgery a capital offence, was outraged when he heard the sentence of a Kazi of Chittagong, which was in strict accord with Muhammadan Law, on certain persons guilty of robbery and violence. The substitution of a benal law from Europe for the laws of the two great communities was the first step in British administration, and the process was hastened by the Supreme Court.1 step was taken when the civil law relating to person and property (vyavahāra) was taken up for translation. Halhed translated from a Persian version the Sanskrit digest of vyavahāra made to the order of the Governor-General. more satisfactory work was demanded by Hindu opinion, and it was supplied by Jagannatha's nibandha on vyavahāra, still unprinted, of which a part was translated in 1797, and is known as 'Colebrooke's Digest.'

¹ Founded in 1774.

Other translations of legal works, like the vyavahāra section of the Mitākṣara and the Mayūkha, the Dāyabhāga of Jīmūtavāhana, the Dāyakramasamgraha of S'rī Krsna, and two well known treatises on the law of adoption followed. 'manuals of 'Hindu Law,' for the guidance of judges and lawyers ignorant of Sanskrit, were also compiled by Strange, Wilson and Macnaughten. Since their time, the addition to this branch of modern legal literature has been considerable, and has been largely due to the growth of case-law. In spite of increasing dependence on judicial decisions in the interpretation of Hindu law and usage, the desire for the study of treatises on vyavahāra, either in Sanskrit or in translations, did not sensibly diminish, mainly because the Bench began to be strengthened by the appointment of judges to whom the texts and local and caste usage held an appeal. Recently there was a mild flutter when an Indian member 1 the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council made citations in Sanskrit in a judgment which he pronounced.

Apart from the question of proximate utility, the selection of the vyavahāra content of Dharmas'āstra for study is also due to the assumption that it alone dealt with the "secular" as contrasted with the "religious" aspects of Hindu life and activity. Such a division of the life of the Hindu is not however correct. Hindu thought does not recognise the distinction. Secular and religious considerations are inextricably interwoven in Hindu motives and actions. This feature is reflected in Dharmās'āstra. Legal capacity is held to rest on spiritual. Legal competence can be affected by ceremonial impurity, by the commission or the omission of particular religious duties, and by their performance at proper and improper moments. This is why the treatment of asauca (impurity arising from birth or death) and kālanirņaya (determination of the proper time for doing prescribed things) occupies so large a space in Hindu legal literature. Some of the old rules may be argued as still operative. So critical a writer as Jimūtavāhana found it necessary to write, besides his two books on inheritance (Dāyabhāga) and procedure (Vyavahāra-matṛkā) a much larger treatise on the "determination of suitable time" (Kālaviveka,) and Mādhavacārya also wrote a Kālanirņaya. In old Indian criminal law, as in other archaic penal law, spiritual and secular punishments were intermixed. An offence was treated as both a sin and a crime. Much misunderstanding of the supposed one-sided and unfair discrimination in the award of punishments on a caste-basis is due to a failure to visualise that every offence had two sentences, both of which were usually operative. In a sceptical age like ours the sentence of a spiritual authority and the imposition of even an exacting penance or rite of expiation will be regarded as light in comparison with imprisonment, banishment or death, while mere refusal to admit a person even to the right of expiation, as a penalty for the gravest offences, will be viewed as virtually letting an offender off. But it is not right to interprete the beliefs and usages of one age by those of another. When life was viewed as continuous, and as extending over both ante-natal and bost-mortem time. and when the idea that an unexpiated offence entailed very grave consequences in a future existence was implicitly accepted, the deterrent effect of a denial of the right of expiation must have been very powerful. Civil status and competence was held to be affected adversely by unfulfilled penance or purification, or by some defect in an enjoined ceremony or sacrament. This is why the treatment of sacraments (samskāra), purification (suddhi) and expiatory rites (prāyascitta) occupies such an important place in Dharmasāstra. The so-called 'Brahman immunities' should be judged in relation to this attitude. Kauṭilya, who does not hesitate, when considering the punishment of treason against the state, to over-ride the smṛti rule that a Brahman cannot be put to death, denies even maintenance to the apostate, with an exception in favour of the mother alone, because apostacy placed one beyond the pale of redemption by purificatory rites.

¹ The Right Honorable Sir Shadilal P. C.

The assumption of a secular, as distinguished from a religious division in Indian legal and political literature is responsible for the magnification, in modern times, of Arthas'āstra, supposed to represent the realistic and secular, as contrasted with Dharmasastra reflecting the idealistic and religious element. The assumption of the origin of Arthasāstra from a secular source is opposed to Indian tradition, which attributes a semi-divine, or at least an inspired source to it. It was counted in smrtis among the sources of law, to which judicial recognition was due. Judges and assessors (sabhyāḥ) were to be expert in both Arthasāstra was included either under Atharva-veda, or Itihāsa, described as the fifth Veda. or was counted by itself as a sixth Veda. The implication of this picturesque statement is that it had the authority, which any body of doctrine claiming to be a Veda will have, and yet, not being of the strict Vedic corpus, it was available, like the Epics and Purānas and the sciences and arts (silpa, kalā) placed under the fifth and sixth categories, to women and to men of the unregenerate castes (S'ūdrāntyajāḥ) for study. This feature made it very acceptable in periods in which, contrary to tradition and rule, thrones were occupied by non-Kṣatriyas and by women, and a considerable section of the population left the Brāhman fold to accept Buddhism and Jainism, which were outside the pale for denying the authority of the Veda.

The 'secular' character of Arthasastra is another assumption which can be justified neither by its content nor context. Arthasastra shared the same beliefs as Dharmasastra. Its toleration of heresy was not new. Even before the days of Kautilya the Buddhist Sangha had become powerful. Asoka and his successors the heterodox position was further strengthened. Both Asoka and his successor Dasaratha patronised even the Ajivakas, who were atheists. Manu refers to associations of heretics, whose usages must be upheld for their own members. The heretic might be a nuisance but an administrator could not ignore his existence in society, especially when he had a powerful following. This is why in Rājanīti, beginning with Kautilya, it is laid down that a king, in granting audience, should give preference to heretics, magicians, learned Brahmans and destitute women. Heterodoxy was often believed to possess a mystic power which was the source of its confidence. The rule is thus merely one of prudence. The recommendation of Kautilya that the philosophies to be included in royal studies should include Anvīsikī, the Sāmkhya, Yoga and Lokāyata, is coupled with the injunction that they should be learnt only from teachers of proved orthodoxy. Yājñavalkya, like Manu, recognises the customs of heretics (pāṣaṇdāh), and the reference must be to the Buddhists. This is proof of the spirit of comprehension in Dharmas'āstra, of which another is the theory that it included Arthasastra. Manu's impatience with those who followed Artha and Kāma, is not a condemnation of the subjects which dealt with them, but was aimed against those addicted to the excessive pursuit of wealth and pleasure. It is not open to infer from the existence, from Mauryan times, of separate courts for the trial of criminal and civil causes that the differentiation reflected a distinction between secular and religious law, for the matters were adjudicated on in both types of tribunal. Criminal jurisprudence was also assigned a divine origin, and Danda (the Spirit of Punishment) was held to have been divinely created. Differences between rules of Dharmasastra and Arthasastra are neither more numerous nor wider than those within each, according to different writers. From the postulates that all knowledge is ultimately based on eternal verity (Veda) and that apparent differences or conflict, merely indicate options, (vikalba) it follows that the differences between the two sastras must be viewed as capable of explanation and reconciliation. Revealed knowledge must be self-consistent. There cannot therefore be any real conflict between Arthasastra and Dharmasastra. The hypothesis of divine origin invested both with the qualities of universality, consistency and permanence. It is inconsistent with belief in God's omniscience to presume that circumstances and contingencies, which arise from age to age, or differ place to place, are not foreseen and provided for in literature which springs from Divinity. One's inability to find a unifying principle between apparent opposites does not mean that such a principle does not exist and is not discoverable. Generalisations of this type paved the way for wide interpretation, and for the evolution of a science compounded of equity, logic, psychology, grammar and rhetoric, to which the name Mīmāmsā came to be given. The rules of Mīmāmsā, which later on underwent systematisation, are not un (like) like those evolved in western law in regard to the interpretation of statute law, but they follow as corollaries from the premises of Hindu religion. First designed for Vedic exegesis, their application to Dharmas āstra and Arthas āstra compelled their further elaboration and consolidation as a coherent body of doctrine. The two subjects to which interpretation applied benefited from it, particularly Dharmasastra; for it survived, superseded and absorbed Arthasastra. The latter, which had enjoyed a vogue in and before the days of Kautilya and had been cultivated in many schools, ceased to command the old weight after the foundation of the powerful empire of the Mauryas and their successors. Its derivation from S'ruti made it as unacceptable to the Buddhist as the Smrti. In the Brahamanical reaction under the S'ungas, Bhāras'ivas and Vākāṭakas in North, and under the S'ātavāhanas and Pallavas in South India, an impatience of compromise was born. In the revision of Dharmas'āstra and of epic literature made in the epoch, the Arthasastra core of smrtis was strengthened so well that Arthasastra ceased to have an independent existence. Arthasastra works adapted themselves to the changed milieu. Kāmandaka's Nītisāra, which claims to be based on Kauṭilya's work, adopts, like the smṛti, the sloka as the medium of expression. It rivals Manusmṛti in magnifying the power and position of the king. It omits the entire field of administration and law, leaving them to works like Manu's. It elaborates the technique of foreign relations, involving the mutual relations of rulers (Rāja-mandala) and interests, forming groups ranging in number from sixteen to three-hundred-andsixty. It stresses only those features of its original as were acceptable to the Brahman reaction. The difference between Kautilya and Kāmandaka is that between one who saw a great empire rise on the foundations of a number of small states, and of one who witnessed the daily struggles and the shifting alliances of a number of precarious principalities. Later works, like those of Somadeva and Hemacandra, reflect the steady political decline, of which we have evidence in history.

The Nītivākyamrta of Somadeva is more a literary experiment than an original essay on politics. He reproduced in pithy sentences the words of Kautilya, but not the spirit. That was not to be expected. Temperamentally, the Mauryan kingmaker and the pacific Jain ascetic were poles apart. The subject-matter of Somadeva's little book is more closely related to Kāmandaka's work than to Kāmandaka's famous original. Hemacandra's Lagu-arhan-nīti is more an imitation of the popular summary of smrti rules (e.g. the Smrtisangraha) than a contribution to Arthasāstra. Civil law is its chief topic. It reproduces the matter in digests, but without a reference to the ultimate and paramount authority of the Veda. Somadeva's book is taken up with moral maxims. It could have little use to an administrator. Hemacandra's book might have been used in a Jain kingdom, like that of Kumārapāla, but it is, at its best, a poor substitute for the works of Hemacandra's contemporaries Vijñānes vara and Laksmīdhara. The aim of the Jain monk and polyhistor was to establish his claim to all-round learning and not to add sensibly to the literature of polity or law. The literature of Rajadharma, contained in the later digests more properly belongs to Dharmas'āstra.

There is another reason for the imperfect comprehension of the scope of Dharmasāstra and its content. It consists in the misunderstanding of the small quantum of "worldly" matter in smṛtis, particularly in those of the earlier and later times, and its absence in many of them. On the other hand, there are smrtis of the middle period (fifth to eighth century A.D.), which omit everything but the "civil law". Nāradasmrti is an example. The lost works of S'ankha-likhita, Hārīta (prose), Kātyāyana and Bṛhaspati seem to have had a large "civil law" content. The works of Manu and Yājñavalkya are comprehensive, and of the two, the latter, though very closedly related in doctrine and attitude to Arthasastra (perhaps even to Kautilya's work) is relatively sketchy on politics. Parās arasmṛti, which commends itself as the one pre-eminently indicated for the present age, is pre-occupied with ācāra and prāyasccitta and ignores law and politics completely. Is it to be inferred that the subjects were regarded as of no value to the present age? The core of purely legal matter, in the modern sense, in the Dharmasūtras of Gautama, Āpastamba, Bodhāyana, Vasistha and Viṣṇu is thin, and forms in each work but a small proportion of the total. Lost verse smrtis like those of Yama, Vyāsa and others, seem to have dealt with both sides, but it is impossible in their present fragmentary condition to guess the relative proportions of the two sections in their original state. The usual explanation is that the different proportions reflect the secular or unsecular bias of the writers. The sūtras and later smṛtis are supposed to have been preoccupied with religion and ceremonial, a few only dealing with "law", under the influence of Arthasāstra. The later smṛtis belong roughly to the same age as Kāmandaka. If, under the influence of Arthasastra, they devoted themselves to legal questions to the exclusion of religious and half-religious-topics, it is remarkable that Kāmāndaka, who was deliberately modelling his book on Kautilya's Arthasāstra, should completely ignore civil law and administration, which form a glory of his original, though even in it, the sections dealing with law proper form but a small part of the whole. Kāmandaka's omissions should therefore be explained, like that of Somadeva, on the ground that he assumed the prevalent civil codes like those of Nārada. The theory of bias must accordingly fail. An efficient cause may also be found in the literary form of smrti literature of the earlier epoch, and the methods in vogue for the transmission of doctrine. The older smrtis are not only in prose but in aphoristic prose (sūtra), devised for memorising and for economy. A sūtra was not intended to be read. The aphorisms would usually be unintelligible to the uninitiated. The purpose of aphorisms was to act as sign-posts, and keep the real exposition to the track. It was so in Buddhist as in Brahmanic literature. The sloka, which came in to vogue later on was in some respects as useful. Its rhythm enabled it to stick to the memory, and it was more intelligible than a sūtra. But it lacked brevity, on which much store was set. In the earliest epochs of Vedic study, the Kalbasūtra would be taught in the school of the branch (s'ākha) of a particular Veda, and the traditional explanation would be handed down in the school. It would not be reduced to writing but be available for recitation in class. The paramount value of the teachings of the Buddha and the belief that the Suttas (sūtras) of the Tripiţaka reproduced his actual words, made the early Buddhists arrange for recitations of Suttas in the annual gatherings of the Sangha. No similar compelling motive was present in the case of Dharmasāstras, which did not always form part of the Kalpasūtra of any particular Vedic school. Their commentaries were handed down from teacher to pupil, and ran the risk of becoming lost, when those who possessed the traditional explanation perished. When smrti material was reorganised as a collection (samhita), in a comprehensive work, it incorporated much explanatory material till then preserved by oral transmission. The Manusmrti apparently incorporated much matter of the kind, as also the Brhaspatismrti, judging from the character of its fragments. Invasions and wars must have interrupted the work of transmission. To such calamities must be attributed the loss of much smrti material and the earliest commentaries embodying oral tradition. Among the lost commentaries that of Yajñasvāmin on Vasistha, Asahāya's bhāṣyas on Manu and Gautama, and the commentaries on Vișnu, Kātyāyana and Bṛhaspati must be counted. Again, the oldest commentaries on the Dharmasūtras are removed by centuries from their texts. We regard Karka. Maskarin and Haradatta as very old commentators, but between each of them and his original, twelve to fifteen centuries must The distance in time between Manusmrti and Medhātithi, or Yājñavalkya and Visvarūpa is much less. is only from the bhāṣyas, or elaborate commentaries, which came nearest the oral transmission of the interpretation of the sūtra literature, that one can form an idea of the space originally occupied by the different heads of a subject of the sūtras, and of the relative importance attached to them. For instance, the first four aphorisms of the Brahmasūtra are deemed relatively the most important in about a hundred and fifty, forming the whole, but they take up over a fourth of the whole space in the great commentaries of S'ankara and Rāmānuja. In the absence of continuous traditional interpretation, there was always the risk of misapprehension of the views of the original sūtra, even when shorter explanations embodying the traditional view, known as vārttikāh were supplied, as they were in many cases. But, even these were often criticised as not correctly conveying the meaning and drift of the sūtra. and the declared purpose of a bhāṣya was to explain, correct and supplement the vārttika. The Mahābhāṣya does so in regard to the grammatical aphorisms of Pāṇini and the vritti of Kātvāyana. Kumārila does so in explaining the aphorisms of Jaimini and commenting on the bhāsya of S'abara. Without vārttika and bhāṣya, a sūtra book is often not only not intelligible, but it is apt to mislead. Take the case of Kautilya's work. At the end of it, there is a s'loka which declares that having had experience of the contradictions between originals and commentaries, Vișnugupta (i.e. Kauțilya) composed both the sūtra and the bhāsva. The text of the Arthasastra of Kautilya is mostly in prose, though there are many verses interspersed. They have all been usually taken as sutra. Mahāmahopādhyaya T. Gaņapati S'āstri, to whom we owe both a good text and a valuable commentary, accepted the last s'loka as authentic, and regarded the brief statements of the content in the introductory chapter (adhikarana-samuddes'a), which are reproduced at the beginning of chapters, as the original aphorisms (sūtra) and the substance of each chapter as the commentary of Kautilya. The view merits acceptance. aphorisms are just like chapter headings nothing more. Sūtras like Vyavahārasthāpana and Dāyabhāgah are just headings. Suppose only these aphorisms or headings survived from the work of Kautilya. Could anything be gathered from them of his views, which are now so well-known? As verse smrtis are often the lineal successors of sūtra works, the peculiarity may be postulated of them also. The long discussions of the great bhāsyakāras, who commented at length on Manusmṛti and Yājñavalkya-smṛti will then be viewed as carrying on the tradition of the transmission of authentic interpretation of such aphoristic literature. The 'tacking' of Mādhavācārya, in his well-known commentary on Parās'arasmṛti, of a whole book of civil law (vyavahāra) and maxims of government to a quarter-verse of the smṛti (Rājā dharmeṇa þālayet) will then be recognised as not exceeding the legitimate duty of a commentator, and his elaboration of the civil law, which the original appears to ignore as not a mere tour de force.

¹ Curiously, the works of Kumārila are entitled varttīkas and tīka, while S'abara's work is styled bhasya.

Bhāsvas and nibandhas (digests) continued to be written up to the threshold of our own times. Nevertheless, there has been an increasing neglect of Dharmasastra. It has not only shared the misfortune of all technical literature in Sanskrit through the drying up of the springs of patronage, but it has also suffered from another cause. The contact between European and Indian cultures in the 19th century produced. in Hindus, in the beginning an admiration for the former and induced an apologetic attitude for the supposed crudities of the latter. There came, later on, a new love for and pride in their ancient literature. But the revival helped only the study of the Veda and its auxiliaries, classical Sanskrit literature, and Indian philosophical systems. Dharmas āstra had little share in the revived interest. Its very mass repelled all but the few who devoted their time to the Kalpasūtras, in their triple division of strauta, grhya and dharma. Manusmṛti was an exception. It is illustrative of the indiscriminate trend of the movement that when translations of even the smaller smrtis of Nārada, Vișnu and Brhaspati were included in Max Müller's "Sacred Books of the East," a version of the samhita of Yājñavalkya, which had been so great an attraction, was not finally included in the series. Recent interest is due to lawyers and judges, who know Sanskrit. Indifference to Dharmasāstra is still pretty general, and may be traced to the feeling that 'things that matter' like law and politics, are wanting in such "priestly" books. Most students have neither the patience nor the conviction, which made Colebrooke obtain a grounding in Mīmāmsā, which is so vital to an understanding of Dharma-s'āstra, before he translated the Digest of Jagannātha.

The result is regrettable in view of the excellent progress made in the study of our history, and of the application of the comparative or historical method to law and politics. Henry Maine's influence was an important factor of the change. It helped to supersede the analytical study of Indian law and politics by the historical. Institutions are now viewed as growths which suggest lines of evolution. The reciprocal influence of idea and environment is assumed and investigated. Institutions, movements and ideas are judged without bias. But, have these safeguards been applied in the study of Dharmasastra? Is it not a common tendency to assume ignorance, prejudice and self-interest as the ruling motives of hierarchy, and to regard them as present in Dharmas āstra. because it apparently emanates from the priestly class? Even a cursory view of Dharmas'āstra must dispel such ideas. The critical faculty is not the monopoly of the modern age, any more than reasoned scepticism. S'abara indulges, in quite a 'modern' manner, in flings at priests and their selfishness when he comments on the purpose of some Vedic rites. Kautilya does not spare his own teacher. S'ankarabhatta does not spare his father, the renowned Kamalākara. Good faith and competence alone earn respect for authority from our 'legal' writers.

Doctrines which sound strange to us are not necessarily unsound. Nor can we presume that in an earlier age they were not considered reasonable and well-grounded. Take the instance of the doctrine that the king and the Brahman uphold the world-order. The acutest writers of India accepted it, though they were aware of the weaknesses of individual rulers and Brahmans. Deliberate or veiled sophistry was certain of exposure in times in which logic was well-developed. Distortions of meaning were difficult when the rules of interpretation were clearly laid down and understood by those who used them. author who misquoted a text, or altered its wording, would be promptly exposed. The care with which the texts were preserved, especially in technical literature, is seen in the way in which bhāsyas and digests notice and discuss even petty differences in reading. An authority opposed to one's own view is never ignored or suppressed. It is met squarely. The principle was enforced by the peculiar form adopted in exposition. The opposed statements were stated, then answered and the conclusion reached last. There were other conditions favouring literary integrity. Learning was localised in places like Kāsī, Paithān and Nāsik. The wandering scholar, who carried his library in his head, roamed about as a pilgrim and made his learning pay for the tour, helped to keep ideas and books in circulation. A new book soon acquired an instantaneous influence and recognition proportioned to its merit, even in far-off places, in an age which had not the advantages of printing. The conditions made for uniform texts as well as the spread of new methods, new ideas and new doctrines in areas far removed from those in which they were first promulgated. Critical estimates of the honesty, accuracy, and reliability of writers were carefully canvassed. and spread throughout the country. New writers had need to be careful. Rivalry between scholars was keen and criticism sharp and unsparing. The conditions were such as to ensure integrity in texts, accuracy and fidelity in interpretation, logic in inference, and absence of bias in application.

The spread of priestly impositions in such an atmosphere can be safely ruled out.

But it is largely on such presumptions and on defective understanding that many views of our day about Dharmas āstra are based. J. J. Meyer, to take a distinguished example, discriminates between Indian works on magic and law, and places Dharmas'āstra under the former. The view is akin to that which ascribes the birth of civil law (vyavahāra) to the influence of political environment, and its incorporation into Dharmas'āstra to an alliance between king and priest. small content of 'law' in smrtis, the existence of two classes of Mauryan courts, and the assumption that Indian thought differentiates between "religious" and "secular" elements are responsible for these wrong generalisations. They fail to recognise either the importance of unwritten law, preserved in the recollection of assessors and judges, who had to be trained in Dharmas'āstra, or to the relative value to be attached to customary and king-made rules. Jolly's dictum that the characteristic of Dharmas'āstra is high-flown religious idealism expresses a kindred view. To describe Arthasāstra as 'public law' and Dharmasastra as 'private law,' as a recent writer (B. K. Sarkar) does, is to miss the intimate relation between the Hindu state and family, and the duty of the former to correct irregularities of conduct by members of the latter.

The Indian king was believed to be responsible as much for the correct conduct (ācāra) of his subjects, and their performing the prescribed rites of expiation (prāyascitta) as for punishing them, when they violated the right of property or committed a crime. The ācara and prāyascitta sections of the smṛti cannot accordingly be put outside the "secular" law. The allied distinction between Arthas'āstra and Dharmas'āstra on the plea that the former deals with real-politik and the latter with ideals, over-looks the fact that when judges and parties shared the same ideals, as expressed in smrtis, ideals were translated into action, and that there was an "idealistic" element in Arthas'āstra as much as in Dharmas'āstra. Breloer's view that Arthasastra is "planned economy" is correct taken by itself, but the 'plan' is part of a wider scheme of social organisation, laid down in Dharmasastra. Dr. K. P. Jayaswal's distinction between Arthasastra, Rajanīti, and Dharmasastra as that between "municipal and secular law", "constitutional law," and "penance law" is not only based on superficial observation but on the disputable view of the origin and function of the two classes of Mauryan courts, and a failure to observe, that Rājanīti in the widest sense will include (as Sarkar realises), all Dharmasastra. The occasional identification of Dharmas'āstra and vox populi is due to the translation of 'Mahājana,' in a famous verse from the Mahābhārata, into 'the populace,' whereas it only means a magnanimous man learned in Dharma.

Illustrations can be multiplied of the prevailing misconception of Dharmas'āstra and its supposed rivals. Its primary cause is a failure to start, as in many nibandhas, with a chapter dealing with definitions of terms, (paribhāṣā) in which the term Dharma is explained. The word Dharma is indeed difficult to define, and Āpastamba, in a famous passage, states that it is best to gather its import from practice. Indian logic (Nyāya) defined it as an innate quality of the soul, action enjoined (i.e. by the Veda). The idea is further developed in Mīmāmsā. Dharma is that which is signified by a direction and results in a benefit. The Nyāya school held that an invisible effect, called apūrva attached itself to the soul by the performance of an enjoined act (Dharma), and lasted till the benefit actually accrued to the soul. Dharma was thus regarded as fixed in action. A school held that its effect was instantaneous, though its manifestion had to wait till death. The idea is akin to the belief that good and bad actions are inseparable from the soul and guide its pilgrimage through existences (Karma, samsāra). Dharma is viewed as the norm, which sustains the universe, and in this sense is somewhat like the Vedic Rtam, and the Greek Law of Nature. For practical purposes, Dharma can be taken as the innate principle of anything in virtue of which it is what it Analysed and applied, the conception becomes ethically duty, physically essential property, spirituality in religion and righteousness or law in popular usage. Manu equates Dharma with merit flowing from doing the right thing (punya). and in that sense it is described as the only thing which follows the soul. The belief in a moral God leads to the identification of Dharma with the Deity. Viewed in its working, Dharma is law of cause and effect, and is described as destroying when violated and protecting when obeyed. Innate quality and potentiality are related; so Dharma is taken to be the mean between the ideal and the possible. The many wide extensions which are given to the term by itself and in combination with qualifying words, is illustrated in the recently published Dharmakos'a. The Buddhist adopted the concept, omitting the postulate of its being due to Vedic injunction. It becomes the root-principle of cosmic order, by finding which one can obtain liberation (nirvāna). It includes and underlies every law, physical, ethical, and human, and it is eternal. It forms therefore, along with the Buddha and the Sangha the Triratna (Three Jewels) of Buddhism.

Strictly construed, every science will thus be Dharma-sāstra, but the term was restricted to enjoined human action. So conceived, it was divided into pravṛtti and nivṛtti Dharma, according as its end was action or freedom from it, into ordinary and extra-ordinary, (sādhaṛaṇa, asādhraṇa), into iṣta and pūrta (viewed from the standpoint of enjoined Vedic ritual), and as relating to varṇa (caste), station (āsrama), caste and station (varnāsrama), quality (guṇa) and context (nimitta). The divisions were subdivided, as general, special, equal and emergent e.g. Āsramadharma.

If differences springing from detail are put aside, Dharma is the whole duty of man. It includes not only the relations of man to man, but of man to the Universe. Whatever is enjoined by authority or the inward promptings of conscience is Dharma and comes within the scope of Dharmas'āstra. this sense its scope is encyclopaedic, and it comprehends all knowledge. This idea is implicit in the enumeration of the location of Dharma (Dharmasthana) which brings all knowledge within it. The Purānas alone rival Dharmas āstra in so a wide scope. Vijñānes vara brings Arthas āstra, on this among other grounds, under Dharmas āstra. Apart from the relevance of legal medicine in any system of law, Ayurveda (Medicine) is one of the Dharmasthanas. So are Astrology, (Ivautisa) and Natural Science (Laksana). Two famous collections, both of Dharmas āstra, made in the 16th century illustrate this view. Mitramisra's Viramitrodaya has these branches among its 22 books. So has Todar Mal's less famous Dharmasaukhva. Sometimes, the relevant information from a branch may alone be brought in; as medical knowledge in the treatment of grievous hurt, questions of paternity determination, the relative position of twin children, the liabilities of professional soldiers, etc. But certain sections were deemed essential in a Dharmas ästra.

The best example of a complete Dharma digest (Dharmanibandha) is the Kṛtyakalpataru of Bhaṭṭa Lakṣmīdhara. is the oldest now available, and one of the most comprehensive and authoritative. It adopts a special arrangement not found in other digests. Taking the life of man to begin (as Hindu jurisprudence held it to begin) with conception in the womb, and to end in salvation after death (Moksa), Laksmidhara expounds the traditional view of the public and private duties of man in a sequence following the progress of life and station. The first book begins with the period of dedicated study (Brahmacarya). The second is devoted to the house-holder, i.e., the ordinary citizen (Grhastha), and the third to the daily and periodical duties, and the proper time for their performance (Nivatakāla). The offering of oblations to ancestors is an essential duty, signifying the continued existence of the family. The ceremonies connected with this duty (S'rāddha) occupy the fourth book. In the Iron Age (Kaliyuga) an easy way of acquiring merit is by making gifts (Dāna) which form the subject of the fifth book. The dedication of objects of worship (Pratisthā), and the rites of worship (Pūjā) take up the next two sections. Merit (punya) accrues and demerit disappears. Pilgrimages to holy places or streams (Tīrtha) are performed. But pilgrimage cannot get rid of the need for ceremonial expiation, which is prescribed for all transgressions. The rites of expiation (Prāyascitta) perhaps took up another entire book which is now lost. Ceremonial impurity is believed to arise from birth, death, action, and contact. Purification from such impurity (S'uddhi) is therefore next dealt with. Thus far all the sections are common to persons irrespective of their civil status. But, kings have not only to enforce, as part of their regal duty, the performance by every one of his special duty, but they have other duties springing from the headship of society. These are brought together in a separate section, named Rājadharmakānda. The commonest work of the king, in a society, in which public opinion largely enforces the performance of religious and sacramental duties, even apart from State-compulsion, is that of seeing that every man's person, property and status are not violated by any other person. Disputes concerning these come under Vyavahāra, with its eighteen conventional titles. two sections ordinarily viewed as politics and law, form the twelfth and eleventh books. Among the duties of the king was that of performing public ceremonies, believed to be able to combat evil influences threatening society or its head. Misfortune is heralded by alarming portents (adbhuta). The treatment of these is taken up in the thirteenth section on propitiation (S'anti). To every one comes death, and the way to release (Moksa) if life has been properly lived. treatment concludes a vast treatise in fourteen sections, typical of the content of Dharmasāstra.

Lakṣmīdhara's great book was written to a king's order. It has been described to show the correct view of the scope of a smrti or nibandha. Many digests were written subsequently, but with the exception of Vīramitrodaya, none formally treats of all the sections in the Kṛṭyakalpataru, though more or less the same matter is distributed in them. Sometimes, entire sections are omitted in certain digests, e.g. Rājadharma, in the narrower sense, in Smrticandrikā, and Vyavahāra and Rājadharma in Smrtimuktāphala, to refer to two digests with which we are familiar in South India. Their authors had no political and forensic experience and so they refrained from dealing with what they did not know. The same reason will explain why Candesvara omits the sections dealing with consecration, purification, expiation, propitiation and salvation in his Ratnākara. He was a Thakur and not a full Brahman. Lakṣmīdhara was not merely a learned Brahman, but he had held successively every major administrative office, under a powerful king, before he commenced his digest. He did not feel debarred either by want of administrative experience or of S'rotriya status from dealing with every division or topic of Dharma.

The correct perception of the scope and content of Dharmasāstra, and of the means of ascertaining Dharma, requires. as an antecedent condition, a grasp of the major assumptions or postulates of Indian belief and their logical implications. The more important of them may be indicated. First in importance were two allied hypotheses: "Dharma has its root and finds its sanction in revelation (Veda)," and "the sole subject of revealed literature (Veda) is Dharma." The Veda is boundless, eternal, uncreated, omniscient, and consistent with itself and ultimate reality. In its branches, and in the knowledge derived from it, it is one-pointed. All of them aim at a common goal, teach the same doctrine, and their authority is equal. The purpose of life is four-fold, viz. the pursuit of welfare, of pleasure and salvation, (artha, kāma, moksa) along with the performance of Dharma; and the four-fold purpose corresponds to and is rendered possible of attainment by the four-fold division of the population (cāturvarņa) and the four-fold division of life (caturāsrama). From these premises a number of inferences of importance for the determination of valid conclusions were drawn by close reasoning. They demanded and obtained universal acceptance. A few of them may be mentioned illustratively. The hypotheses in regard to the Veda led to the conclusion that any rule in a smrti for which a Vedic source can be found becomes invested with the infallibility of the Veda, and its binding authority cannot be questioned. The first duty of a commentator is to search the Veda for the authority for any rule. S'abara, Kumārila and later writers of Mīmāmsā revel in such research. Visvarūpa excels finding Vedic authority for the text of Yājñavalkya, and Medhātithi for that of Manu. Since the Veda is limitless, it might be presumed that a portion of it has still to be found. But as human ingenuity and skill cannot be equal, in our degenerate times, to the discovery of the Vedic source of every smrti rule, those rules for which such an origin cannot be found, are not to be rejected, if they are still found in a smrti, as that raises the presumption that the author of it had the Vedic source before him which eludes the commentator. Its operation will therefore be held in suspense. The Veda is the bed-rock of Hindu religion. As Dharma is its only relevant content, the science which lays down Dharma (Dharmasastra) has the binding character of revelation. The hypothesis that Dharma creates a benefit, which attaches itself to the soul (ātman) leading to a happy result ultimately, made the exact study of Dharmas'āstra a paramount duty.

An infallible Veda cannot contain any internal inconsistency. Nor can it be really in conflict with what is manifest to experience. Since all knowledge has an ultimate Vedic basis, every branch of knowledge must be in accord with every other. Veda and smṛti must agree; so should smṛti and smṛti, smṛti and Purāṇa, and so on. The practice of good men, i.e., men brought up in a proper tradition, should be presumed to be in accord with Vedic injunction, and be accepted as a guide to conduct. Hereditary practice must raise a similar presumption, and so also common usage or custom. When there is an apparent discord between a rule derived from one source and that from another, every endeavour should be made to reconcile them. Smrti like the Veda is limitless in extent. Hence, even an unnamed or unidentified smṛti text, (smṛtyantara) must not be rejected, unless it is manifestly a forgery. So with a Purāṇa, or even an Upapurana. There should be a close search for internal consistency. Caution is necessary in accepting guidance in so vast a field, and there should be no hesitation in rejecting unauthentic rules. An illustration may be given. The rule that a boy, who had undergone samskāras ending with investiture (upanayana) in the father's house, cannot be taken in adoption is laid down in the Kālika Purāṇa. After showing that the text, even if genuine, should be construed differently, Nīlakantha and Anantadeva ultimately reject it, as it was not found in several MSS. of the Purana, and so was unauthentic. The license to search for sanction over so wide field did not lead to carelessness. It induced on the other hand exceptional vigilance in scrutinising every text cited as authority. The rules of interpretation were made more critical, refined and subtle, and so was also their application to the interretation of rules of Dharma as guiding conduct.

The interpretation of Dharma and the adjudication of disputes on its basis was obviously not work for amateurs. To have the king preside over a court and hear cases might be embarrassing. He was therefore replaced by the trained judge, and the equally trained assessors who were to find the verdict. It was open even to an expert visitor to intervene in a trial and state his view as amicus curiae. When there was either conflict between rules or authority, or between rule and usage, or when no rule could be found or the custom cited had to be examined for evidence of authenticity, the questions were to be decided by an ad hoc commission of experts, called parisad, for the constitution of which elaborate rules were laid down. These were three safeguards to ensure proper adjudication. A fourth lay in the power conferred on an expert to state the law on a disputed point, (like a jurisconsult) as a vyavasthā, and the medieval collections of vyavasthās were not unlike responsa prudentam in Rome. The opinion of a commentator or digest was to be honoured as vyavasthā. Special treatises on moot points (dvaita-nirnaya) commanded the respect they deserved.

But for all decisions and their soundness the ultimate responsibility was laid on the king or the state. It was in this way that Dharmasāstra in its comprehensive sense became the law of the country, and as it was the king who enforced its rules, it became $R\bar{a}jadharma$.

THE first impression created by even a superficial view of the extant literature of Dharmas'āstra is its vastness. But what has survived is only a very small part of what must have been composed. Indian social and literary history testifies to tireless industry in the production of this form of literature amidst the storm and stress of the centuries. Calamities like barbarian invasion, internecine war, the impact of alien religions and cultures and political vicissitudes were powerless to stay the creative activity. In such circumstances a disproportionately large number of the intellectual and religious leaders of the community must have been eliminated, even if they were not deliberately singled out for extirpation by a ruler of an hostile religion or culture. Protracted wars have usually resulted in a cultural set-back, and the recovery takes time. That it worked so in India also cannot be doubted. But the wonderful activity in the cultivation of Dharmas astra continued, almost without cessation, even in the middle of wars and foreign invasions, and was sometimes even helped by them. What is the cause of the paradox? What is the compelling influence which gave the subject an enduring vitality and power of recuperation? An answer to the questions throws light not only on the vitality of a subject, which was closely associated with religion and regulated modes of life, but it reveals special features of the governments of the time and their relations to the lives of the people.

Dharmasāstra, like religion, dealt with the whole life, not with only a part of it. No one was outside its jurisdiction: the individual, the family, the corporations, and the king were all under it. It upheld the ideal of an indissoluble union between state and society, and king and subject. The welfare of the king was held to be rooted in the well-being of the people. Political union was sanctified by religious sanction. The King and Danda, the Spirit of Punishment (the power of sanction) were both of divine creation. Anarchy was abhorred. A condition of statelessness was conceivable only in the Golden Age. The doctrines of karma and samsara linked life in this world with other existences and with the world order. A reciprocal influence, generated by Dharma, was believed to connect right or wrong living with cosmic influences of a supernatural character. Good government ensured the happiness of the people and it did so by bringing into operation beneficent influences which made happiness certain. Under ideal rule, like that of Rama, unhappiness and sorrow were unknown. A good king reproduced the conditions of the Golden Age, and a bad one intensified the sufferings of the Iron Age. On the king lies a responsibility, which cannot be shifted or shirked. He is the maker of the age (Rāja kālasya kāraņam). The theory of this awful responsibility of the state was enforced by telling illustrations. An Arjuna was given the name of the Hero of the Golden Age (Kārta-vīrya) because he was so vigilant that he corrected in his subjects even the impulse to wrong-doing. Rama was described as having produced in an age of less perfection the ideal conditions of the Golden Age (Tretā-yuga-pravartitakārta-yuga-vṛttānta). The union of king and subject was like that of soul and body. An evil ruler must be expelled. Taxes are the king's wages; he must earn them by good government. His freedom to do what he likes ends with his coronation (abhiṣeka). Thence forward his life is dedicated to the maintenance of Dharma.

Faith in the reciprocal influence of human righteousness and the order of the universe, which is a teaching of religion, was thus harnessed to social comity, mutual co-operation and obedience to the state. To disobey the king was not merely imprudent; it was a deriliction of Dharma. Conversely oppression was not only risky and foolish, but it was A-dharma, and will lead to prompt retribution both in this world and in others. The fire engendered in the hearts of men by tyrannical rule will burn the king and his dynasty. If God (Viṣṇu) is in the king, He is no less in the subject.

These high conceptions of duty lead to the proposition that good government requires a correct knowledge of Dharma on the part of the ruler. He should know not only his own duties but fully visualise those of every one else in the kingdom. Unhappiness is a sign of error in governing; and as it springs often from social misfits, the discovery and correction of such misfits is a primary duty of the state. As all duties are implicit in Dharma, its vast literature and sources must be explored for the discovery of remedies for injustice and evil, and for the solution of problems continuously thrown up by changing times and circumstances. The belief in the divine character of Dharma and its universality of applicability to all times and circumstances, makes the discovery of remedies to social evils, the aim of research in Dharma. Dharma adjusts obligation to capacity. How far would the principle justify reduction of the weight of caste duties in times of stress, or in the general decline of the Iron Age? Were rules to be the same after the ravages of war, conquest, alien settlement, the penetration into society of the barbarian (mleccha), the multiplicity of economic occupation, enforced departures from functional grouping, and divorce of privilege and the merit to justify it?

In the answers to such questions will be found the reorientation of Dharma. The adjustment of law to the needs of society has usually been made in three ways: by legal fiction, by equity and by legislation. In the evolution of *Dharma*by interpretation and by research, we can see the influence of the first two but not of the third. But, unlike the fictions, which were deliberately used by the civil lawyers of Europe, for reconciling the letter of the law and the needs of society, the hypotheses which served the same purpose in India were those which were believed in as part of religious dogma. The possibility of a sceptical jurist in ancient or medieval India cannot be ruled out, but the probabilities are that every change made by interpretation was made in the honest belief that it was necessary to vindicate Dharma.

Even advanced thinkers are usually the creatures of their age. A study of the variations of opinion among Indian writers on Dharmasāstra will not disclose much chronological progress in ideas, and so-called "liberal views" may be found in writers of earlier and "conservative" leaning in those of later times. The existence of schools clustering round a great teacher or writer like Kautilya might lead to progress within the school. Of this we have parallel evidence in Indian systems of philosophy. But till a late stage, cleavages of opinion, which would have led to the formation of schools of thought, did not arise in Dharmas'āstra, though we can trace divergence of opinion far back. Later differences have been classified as 'schools' and been treated as racial and provincial, though to those who held the views aimed at tenets, the universal acceptance.

The Mauryan empire saw Buddhism rise to the rank of an Imperial religion, but Buddhism was heresy, according to Dharmasāstra. The period of barbarian invasions which followed the break-down of the empire of Magadha raised new problems of adjustment. Among them, the most important were readmission to varnas of those who had gone out of them voluntarily or otherwise, the restitution of rights to abducted and outraged women, condonation (after purificatory or expiatory rites) of breaches of duty and failure to observe the sacramental rules, a new attitude towards non-kṣatriya kings, the recognition of renunciation (sanyāsa) by others than Brahmans, acceptance of foreigners who embraced Brahmanism the reduction of ceremonies which were beyond the strength of the people in altered conditions, permission of divorce and remarriage of women, and realignment privilege and duty to position and responsibility.

The hypothesis that Dharma was good for all time and all circumstances acted as the Law of Nature did in the evolution of Roman law. The processes by which the adjustment of Dharma was insensibly effected were, however, natural and logically followed from the primary hypothesis. The general lines are clear. Smrtis were classified into those which had a 'visible' and an 'invisible' purpose (dṛṣtārtha and adrstārtha). To the former Vedic infallibility did not apply as their aim was wealth and pleasure as contrasted with the performance of enjoined duty and salvation of the latter. The latter prevailed over the former. Secondly, the authority of a smṛti depended on its merit sui generis. In a remarkable passage, Medhātithi dismisses the enumeration of valid smṛtis as futile because there is no end to it, and even a smrti composed in the present generation might, if its doctrine was sound, become an authority. Thirdly, the rule of logical interpretation (nyāya) which Kautilya advocated and Manu condemned, received wide support. Fourthly, the application of valid usage was helped by the injunction to make official records of custom. Customary law was systematised, classified and made applicable to the groups concerned. The doctrine that weakness demands reduced rigor in penance, took the form of Yuga-dharma, accepted in the sense, not that it alone is operative universally in the Yuga or age concerned, but that it gives an option for a lenient construction of duty. The recommendation of gifts (dana) and faith (bhakti) in preference to sacrifice (Yajña) and penance (prāyasccitta), the acceptance of the principle of substitution (pratinidhi) to meet cases in which the original cannot be produced (e.g. kricchra replaced by a money gift to one who does it for the donor), and the principle that certain ancient rites, which were not recommended, may be omitted in Kali-yuga (Kalivarjyas), moved in this direction. last category, it was the tendency to include customs which had gone out of use, like the levirate (niyoga) or rites which became impracticable (like the Asvamedha sacrifice). Rules of pollution (in the case of town life as pointed out by Nanda Pandita) were relaxed in marriages, festivals, pilgrimage, war and personal danger. The practice of referring questions to Pariṣads gained ground, and caste-pariṣads to settle caste rules came into vogue, in imitation of the original.

These changes, along with the appearance on the stage of rulers who accepted the responsibility to enforce Dharma, but had not been brought up in the old tradition, necessitated a recasting of smṛti literature. When a political purpose was behind the recasting, as has been suggested by the late Dr. Jayaswal, in regard to Manusmrti, the rules tended to go back to the old ideals, e.g. the condemnation of S'ūdra mendicancy and celibacy, and magnification of the Brahman. The new dynasties, which were either contemporaries of the S'ungas or came after them, were of dubious caste. Greeks and Scythians, who had no strong religion of their own, and no caste system embraced Brahmanism, and showed excessive zeal like all converts. The horse-sacrifice, which is one of the Kalivariyas, is performed by rulers of doubtful caste, as well as by Brahman Kings like Pusyamitra and the Bhārasivas. The S'atakarnis and the early Pallava rulers performed it. So did the Kadambas and the Gangas, as well as the Vākāṭakas. Even the Kusān Vasiska claims to have done one. Samudragupta, who raised a principality to an empire, and gloried in his relation to an out-caste class, performed two horse sacrifices. Heliodorus, a Greek envoy, calls himself a devotee of Vișnu (bhāgavata and erects a column in a Vișnu temple. The Huns, who were more cruel than other invaders, become worshippers of Visnu. The depressing conditions of the age are reflected in an increasing addiction to magic. The altered circumstances are seen in the new smrtis and Purānas. The literary Renaissance of the Gupta epoch shows the fillip given to new forms of old ideals under the inspiration of the Gupta dynasty. An empire has to be governed.

Civil law is more complex and requires specialists to enunciate it. The demand is met by the versified smṛtis of Yājñavalkya, Bṛhaspati, Nārada and Kātyāyana.

Cleavages of opinion between the smṛtis and their interpreters necessitate the production of adequate scholia. The new commentator cannot however rest content with brief explanations. He must attempt an exposition (Bhāshya). Asahāya (600 A.D.), Visvarūpa (800 A.D.), Medhātithi (850 A.D.) illustrate this movement. The powerful support given to the spread of Mīmāmsā doctrine by Kumārila and to philosophical speculation by S'ankara swept away the lingering remnants of Buddh-Mimāmsā also furnished a potent instrument of smrti interpretation. New dynasties came to power from the eighth century onwards, and history repeated itself. A great impetus was again given to the writing of commentaries and digests. The first experiments in 'legal' comprehension took the form of condensed verse summaries of the conclusions of the major smrtis, which could be memorised and commented on in schools. Examples of it are Medhātithi's lost Smrtiviveka and the anonymous Smrtisārasangraha, Caturvims atimata and Sattrms'anmata, but even these did not meet the new demand for full enunciation of Dharma. New motives for re-examination of the content of Dharma literature came after the Musalman invasions and settlement. There had been wholesale enslavement and forcible conversion to Islam of Hindu men and women. The attempt to rehabilitate them is reflected in Devalasmrti, which declares with vehemence that all smrtis opposed to it were void. The new Rapput dynasties. which came into prominence after the elventh century, like the Gāharwārs of Kanauj, the Paramārs of Mālva, and the Yādavas of Devagiri were fervidly Hindu. Nothing but wholesale recapitulation of Dharmasāstra will satisfy them. Large digests (Nibandhāḥ) become the fashion in every Court. We have lost King Bhoja's celebrated digest, Gopala's Kāmadhenu and several other works of the kind, born of this movement. The Mitākṣara is virtually a digest though greatly limited by its text. The ruler of a modest kingdom in Konkan, the S'ilāhara Āparārka, wins lasting fame by an extensive commentary on Yājñavalkyasmṛti. But the most exhaustive of the digests is easily the Kṛtyakalpataru produced by Lakṣmīdhara, by command of king Govindacandra. In Bengal Bāllālāsena and his teacher Aniruddha produced great digests. The stupendous digest of Hemādri, which covered only part of the ground, was the contribution of the new kingdom of Devagiri.

The later digests like those of Visvesvarabhatta, Madanasimha and Dalapati are useful, along with the digests of Candesvara and Vācaspati Misra, in showing how even under Muhammadan rule, the devotion to Hindu Dharma was sustained. The impulse to compose treatises on Dharmas astra showed no sign of weakening, whether the head of the Musalman empire was a broad-minded ruler like Akbar or a staunch iconoclast like Aurangzib. We owe the great digest of Mitra Misra to the revivalist zeal of a Bundela prince, who ambushed Abul Fazl, and became the friend of Jahangir. The still better known Mayūkhas were composed to the order of a petty Hindu chieftain. The production of such works in an epoch in which no Hindu ruler in Hindustan enjoyed independence, or under the patronage of Musalman rulers, was due to either or both of two motives, viz. the desire to acquire merit by causing to be written, a great work which will be as a guide to more fortunate rulers in the future. and secondly, to have for their own guidance in the small areas under their own rule, suitable codes of the full Hindu Dharma. The revivalist influence coupled with the ambition of new dynasties in commissioning great treatises is best illustrated by the first kings of Vijayanagara under whom Mādhava wrote his famous works, including the commentary on Parāsyara.

Side by side with the production of digests and commentaries went on the writing of treatises on controverted points (Dvaita-Nirnaya). They are most common in the literature of Mithila in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries.

It was impossible to compose a new nibandha for the purpose of settling a number of minor questions in dispute. The composition of a nibandha involved an amount of labour which could be done only by a large body of scholars acting under the supervision of a master. Nor could the doubtful points of Dharma be settled by convoking Parisads, as men with the needed qualifications could not be secured. A permanent commission of legal reference was also out of the question. The Pandita of the royal Court, the successor of the ancient Purodhā, had begun to replace him even in the Gupta period. S'ukranīti (12th century) makes it the duty of the Pandita to consider laws which appear to run counter to tradition and worldly experience and advise the king on suitable action. The work of Parisads was sometimes done by the assemblies of pandits specially convened in places like Kāsī, Paithān and Nāsik, where there was always a number of learned men.

The increase in the number of digests and commentaries did not altogether get rid of the embarrassment caused by conflict of views and doctrine. A conscientious ruler could not easily commission a new digest. It was an expensive business, requiring the services of a large number of scholars working under the direction of the digest-maker. Mimāmsā rule allowing an option (vikalpa), wherever two or more unreconciled positions had each separate authority, tended to increase confusion. If the matter was to be settled a way was open. If the king, as well as his people, ceased to believe in traditional Dharma, the ruler could proceed to frame by royal edict a new body of simple, compact and uptodate laws. But if the king or the bulk of his subjects were orthodox, and relied on Dharmas'āstra, the course was open only if they felt that it was possible to supersede Dharmasästra by royal edict (rājasāsana), giving it the precedence, which it appeared to have in Kautilya's Arthas'āstra. But the passage was interpreted, as the similar one of Yājñavalkya, as implying only the power of a king to declare the law which was not in opposition to Dharma, in cases in which there was doubt, and not as vesting in a ruler concurrent or superior law-making authority. Consistency required that the authority for the alleged power should be considered in its context and read with the injunctions, found in both Arthasastra and Dharmasastra, enjoining the king to adhere to Dharma. Both brought the king within the jurisdiction of law, and allowed decisions to be given against him in his own courts. Medhātithi roundly declared that a king cannot make a law over-riding Dharma. The personification of the power of punishment as a divinity was a picturesque way of expressing the view that the king is subject to law. The evidence of history does not disclose any exercise of the alleged regal power of independent legislation. Asoka, who declared Dharma in his edicts, merely enunciated doctrines which were equally acceptable to Brahman as well as to Buddhist.

He dealt with what would have been called Sādhārana, i.e. ordinary, Dharma. What little evidence there is appears to run counter to the claim. The point may be illustrated. In old Indian law, theft was a capital offence. The receiver of stolen property, even if he took it in good faith, or in the ordinary way of trade, might become liable to punishment. It is stated by Dandin that the Mauryas made a rule that in cases where such property was found in the possession of merchants, the presumption should be of their innocence, and that they should not be punished as receivers of stolen property. The interpretation is equitable. In Indian law, the value of stolen property which was not recovered by the king had to be made good by him. A rule of the kind, alleged to have been made by the Mauryas, could only add to the king's own liability. Another instance is of a small alteration which Asoka claims to have made in criminal procedure. In Ancient India, the passing of a capital sentence was followed by immediate action. There was no time between sentence and execution. Asoka claims to have granted to such an offender a respite of three days, after sentence of death had been passed, to enable him to make his arrangements for spiritual benefit. It is noteworthy that Asoka did not claim a power of reprieve. In the Rajadharmakanda we have recommendations to kings to release prisoners on the occasion of their coronation. But, there is a universal exception to the royal power of pardon, and that is in regard to the sentence of death, which cannot be set aside by a king. Asoka who forbade the slaughter of animals, restricted the prohibition to the royal kitchen, and there is no evidence of his having interdicted the Vedic sacrifices. His prohibition of caponing and castration was merely an enforcement of the Dharma rule against brūnahatti. It is open to presume that if he felt he could change the law in the case of capital offences, the merciful emperor might have exercised the power. His absention should be construed in support of the position of Dharmas āstra that legislation by edict can declare law, but not make law contrary to Dharma. The unnamed Maurya of Dandin might have been the great emperor himself. It is significant that a Buddhist ruler should have been chary of making a change of traditional Dharma, and his frequent references to Dhamma, usually taken as allusions to the Buddhist Dhamma, may as legitimately be viewed as to Brahmanical Dharma. His Dharmavijaya is conquest according to the humane rules prescribed by Dharamasāstra. His Dharma-amātya was no other than the Dharmādhikārī. Asoka's partiality for the term might have been due to policy; even a Buddhist ruler must conform to the Dharma of his subjects. It may be noted that the Satraps of the Dakhan and the Pallavas, both reputed foreigners, styled themselves Dharmarajas. The Kadambas of Banavāsi, who could not have ruled in strict accord with Dharmas'āstra, took the title. The Gangas of Tālkad did so too. Over the seas, the Kaundinya emperors of Campa (e.g. Bhadravarman, c. 400 A. D.) took the title. The Colas gloried in keeping, like Kālidāsa's hero-king, to the rules of Manu. The drift of the evidence is one-pointed.

What was expected from the king indicates what the state was competent to do. It may be gathered from the evils which a condition of anarchy $(ar\bar{a}jat\bar{a})$ was supposed to generate, and which the king was to ward off. Among the things which disappear in anarchy, prominent mention is made of the worship of gods, Dharma, sacrifices and freedom. The discharge of the primary state-duty of protection $(parip\bar{a}-lanam)$ ensures freedom; but the other functions imply the use of directive, regulative and coercive power of the state in the interests of Dharma. The list should be read with the accounts of barbarian (mleccha) rule given by the Purāṇas, as his characteristic was that he contravened Dharma. Vișnu-purăna counts among the enormities perpetrated by the mleccha (the Indo-Bactrian and Indo-Scythian) the slaughter of Brahmans, women and children, killing of kine, greed and unjust taxation, violence, internecine war (hatva eve baras-baram) and omission of the rite of coronation. The mixture of offences against humanity, sound economy, sound polity and ritual should be noted. They are, in popular belief, the signs of Kali, the personification of Evil. Every king who, in medieval times, either ordered the codification of Dharma or did it himself, is described as freeing his kingdom from Kali by the service. The royal champion of Dharma stood not for mere morality but for religion. It is in this sense that the king is classed with the Brahman as the prop of world-order. The curious suggestion that this statement refers to an old rivalry between civil power and the sacerdotal, which was ended by the alliance of king and priest in their mutual interest, is based on misconceptions, among which that of the division of functions between the courts of justice in which the judges and assessors were Brahmans. who declared the law and found the verdict on the evidence, and the executive authority which implemented the judgment, stands foremost. The education of a prince, on the lines indicated in Arthas'āstra and Smrti, for his future office would be possible only if the prince succeeds by hereditary right to an old and established throne, in a small kingdom. A selfmade ruler of a non-kṣatriya caste, who builds up a large kingdom, will neither have had the antecedent education for his office, nor the inclination and facilities to get it after the establishment of his authority and power. He would be more dependent on his Brahman guides in regard to Dharma than a prince educated in the old royal curriculum. His acceptance of traditional duty will be even more complete, because it will be done with less understanding and with more desire for popular applause.

The atmosphere will be unsuitable for either the claim or the exercise of law-making by edict. Dependence for changes necessitated by altered conditions of life and time, will be exclusively on interpretation, involving the silent application of hypotheses and equity. That changes of farreaching character did take place in the law (dharma) relating to almost every department of personal and public relationship is undeniable and will be illustrated later. A change, even one of a radical character, will not appear as revolutionary and as against Dharma, because of the belief in its eternal justice and its all-embracing character. Opposed positions will be viewed as instances of option (vikalpa), when properly vouched for, and will illustrate the latitude allowed by Dharma, when properly understood.

It is easy to give illustrations of the changes which took place, and which were manifestly due to the pressure of public opinion and the inner promptings of what may be termed the 'social conscience.' The first in importance is the altered attitude towards the relative position of the 'sources'. The increasing dependence on usage (caritra), on the doctrine of equal validity of all texts, (ekavākyatva), on anonymous texts (e.g., citations like "iti smṛtih", "smṛtyantare", "evamucyate"), on 'justice and good conscience' (samkalpa, ātman-astuṣṭih), insight and intuition (yukti) and 'the' practice of the elect' (siṣṭā-cāra), is evident, and it helped the process. Bṛhaspati accepts even the usage of castes springing from condemned unions (pratiloma). There was also a tendency to emphasise the consultation of the expert, so as to bring in professional rules under valid custom. The digests illustrate the change in attitude. Mitra Misra accepts as authority the practice of the 'good S'ūdra' (sacchūdra), apparently as a concession to the educated and pious member of the fourth Varna, bringing the extension under 'the practice of the good' (ācaracasiva sādhūnam), in the place of 'the practice of the strict Brahman' (siṣtācāra). The animus against the learned S'ūdra was really due to abhorrence of Jains and Buddhists for their abjuring the Veda and for their wholesale invitation to the S'ūdras to desert their occupations and become monks. With the fall of Buddhism there was a marked reduction of acerbity even towards the Buddhist.

To begin with, we may note the widening of the rules regarding allowable occupation and areas of habitation for the follower of Dharma. It will amuse a modern student if a list of "excluded areas" is made. S'ankha-Likhita excluded Sindh and Magadha. The Mahabhārata excluded the Punjab. Paithīnasi included Orissa by special mention. South India was excluded virtually by all authorities, and the Aryan area meant only the western half of the present United Provinces. acceptance of two principles, viz. (1) that the country is 'sacred' over which the black antelope roams (krṣnamṛga), barley (yava) is cultivated, and the kusa grass grows, and (2) that any area in which there is a holy place (tirtha), or through which a sacred river passes, is unobjectionable, along with the definition of $\overline{A}rya$ as he who accepts the caste-classification, and the Aryan land as that in which Varņāsramadharma prevails, and the application of the rule of necessity (āpad-dharma) to condone travelling to prohibited areas, brought the whole of India, and even far-off countries like Cambodia, Bali and Java within the ambit of permitted areas. Indian maritime activity and colonisation would have been impossible, without open breach of Dharma, but for the elastic provisions.

Next comes the principle of Yuga-dharma, 'the Dharma of Time-cycles,' which was interpreted so as to secure a relaxation in the interests of weaker sex or status. Under this principle, women and S'ūdras can get the same merit (punya) as men and Brahmans by adopting easier rites. Certain forms of easy literature are opened to them.

Their non-investiture (upanayana) was to be viewed as an exemption and a privilege. The wife received the same power (adhikāra) as the husband, without his samskāras, by mere fact of marriage. The principle that a taint was acquired by mere contiguity or association was attenuated till it meant only a lapse through the closest association or actual commission of an offence. The very young and the very old were exempted from many obligatory duties or expiatory rites. The circumstances in which impurity from contact (aspysya) will not arise are made more numerous. Religious cults like those of bhaktimārga and tantra and the spread of monistic (Advaita) philosophy tended to extend both the area and the circle of recognised usage to persons and places accepting their ideas or produced indifference to strict conformity to prescribed conduct. Their influence helped to make things easier for women and the unregenerate castes, and to substitute faith and intuitive knowledge for rites of expiation, and "good works" and 'self-realisation' for ceremonial. But the substitution was not effected without struggles with the adherents of smṛṭi (e.g., case of Vaiṣṇava and S'aiva saints).

In the history of the Indian law of person and property, there is abundant evidence of diversity of view leading to progress. An impulse to change the law was justified on the ground of conscience (ātmanastusti) and the desire to vindicate Dharma. Reform in law or usage is not barred, if the move to change is justified on these grounds. In the field of civil law the main changes which follow are in the direction of the emancipation of the individual and his gains of learning (cf. the way in which the freeing of the 'earnings of the camp,' castrense peculium, from patria potestas paved the way for individualisation of property in Roman law), the reduction in the number of forms of marriage to suit the new conscience (i.e., giving up forms like āsura, rākṣasa and, gāndharva-unions, which are but abduction, rape and seduction), the elaboration of the principle of adoption, and improvement in the civil status and rights of women.

The care of the dependant or destitute woman was then as great a social problem as the unemployed today. At first she was a charge on her family; next the obligation to maintain her was extended also to the clan or sept (kula) and ultimately to the state. Kautilya's recommendation of the provision of workhouses for women will be remembered, as well as his making male relations responsible for the maintenance of their helpless female dependants. The spirit of consideration for the weak, which is a feature of Dharma, is conspicuous in its operation on woman's rights. From mere right of maintenance to her right to inherit is a big advance, but it was already implicit in the Dharma attitude. If Apastamba could assert that by marriage a wife gains the right to a moiety of her husband's spiritual merit (punya) and to none of his sins, the spirit is akin to that of Byhaspati, who pleads vehemently for the right of the childless widow to inherit her husband's estate in preference to agnates: "The wife is recognised by the Veda, the Smrti, the world and men of integrity and virtue as half the husband's person, and his partner in spiritual benefit. The death of the husband destroys only one-half of his person; the other half survives in the widow. So long as she lives, how can any other person take the dead man's estate?" The right of the unmarried daughter to the expenses of her marriage was secured. In times of commotion, the weak require protection more than the strong. To a grown-up and fatherless woman, a husband is the natural protector. Marriage becomes an obligation to women, and is treated as a sacrament. It is invested with further attractions. The reaction against Buddhism and Jainism led to an emphasis on marriage, apart from questions of economic statemanship advocating population to make up the wastage of man-power in war, as these religions admitted women as nuns. But it is not necessary to cite Buddhist influence (as done by Dr. Jayaswal) to explain the recognition of the spiritual equality of the sexes in Hindu Dharma. It was there already. The indissolubility of the marriage tie, in later law, cancelling the older permission for separation and divorce, is perhaps due to the fear of the encroachment of Buddhism on the family, by attracting wives to nunneries. The emphatic condemnation of prolonged celibacy and the advocacy of the house-holder's status, may be due to the reaction against a glorification of renunciation (sanvāsa) for women as well as for men. The medieval Hindu revivals. sanctifying pious works, are responsible for the attempts in digests (e.g., Smrticandrikā and Vyavahāramayūkha) to extend the widow's powers of alienation of property in which she has only a life-interest. When divorce had been universally denied to high-caste women, it was permitted, (as Kautilya did it) to Non-brahmanas; it was saved for the fourth caste, by Kamalākara. The marriage of widows is similarly limited, and then Even virgin widows, to whom leniency had been formerly shown, cannot now remarry, for Devanna Bhatta and Mādhavācārya explain away Parāsara's permission as barred by the inhibitions of the Kali age (kalivarjya). The time when a 'defender of the faith' like Candragupta II married, like Henry VIII, his brother's widow, without outraging orthodox sentiment, was forgotten. The gradual reduction of the levirate (niyoga), from permission to raise many off-spring to the raising of only one son to carry on the line, and then to positive prohibition, apparently on grounds of abuse by temptation springing from sex-impulse or the desire to retain property (definitely condemned by Vasistha), till its disappearance after the sixth century A.D., are to be noted on the debit side. But there is positive gain in two directions. Hypergamous unions (asavarnāvivāha) are prohibited as Kalivariva, and the inhibition was a discouragement of polygamy, already falling through public opinion into desuetude, except in royal families. The growth of orthodox opposition to self-immolation of the widow (sahamarana) was a second gain. Not only did an old jurist like Visnu commend Sati, but there is Greek evidence, for its practice. The citation of Vedic authority for it, as for another famous exception to the rule against suicide (ātmahatyā), is explained away by Medhātithi as analogous to that of black magic, which though found in a Veda, is still unacceptable to the good, and by Devanna Bhatta as an inferior Dharma. Bāṇa naturally denounced it. Tantric influence, which ennobled woman's body, went also against it.

It was interdicted to expectant mothers and to Brahman women. The later attempts to annul the prohibition (as by Mādhavācārya and the Bhaṭṭas) is a reaction due to the same aristocratic feeling which made it survive in Rājputana, and which led to holocausts like those of Gāṅgeyadeva (d. 1041), who was burnt with his hundred wives, or similar horrors in later Rajput and Sikh history. As an institution Sati was doomed long before it was legally prohibited in the 19th century.

In two respects there was hardening of the old rules: viz. the readmission to caste privileges of apostates who desired reconversion, and the rehabilitation of the abducted or ravished woman. As regards the latter, there had been a general safeguard against the offences in the Hindu epochs in the law prohibiting the enslavement and ravishing of even slave women by their owners, and of wet-nurses by their employers (Kātyāyana). The abduction of women of respectable families was a graver crime, and the offence was punished with death, (Vasistha). The offender was included under a special class of criminals (ātatāyinah) who could be slain by any one when caught in delicto. Unchastity in a wife did not entail the forfeiture of a right to maintenance, and there were easy penances for the The case of one who had been abducted and forced into conjugal relationship or into an alien religion was ostensibly stronger. Vasistha, Atri and Parās'ara allow women to be reinstated in such cases after undergoing purificatory rites. Opinion was divided on the question of the readmissibility of a woman who had conceived during abduction, but Devala declared that she should be taken back after she gave birth to the child, which was to be separated from the mother to avoid castemixture (varna samkara). Vijñānesvara, who is later than Devala, and lived at the beginning of the period of Musalman occupation, will not admit her to full rights, but will give her only a locus penitentiae in her husband's house. Her treatment becomes ungenerous during the period Musulman when it should have been otherwise. The rigor was extended to ordinary unchastity in woman, which was naturally worse, being voluntary. (Caturvims'atimata; Aparārka). This attitude shocked Al Beruni. A man who taken a prisoner of war and converted to a had been mleccha religion, and had even associated with mleccha women, might be taken back after purificatory rites, according to Devala. Cases of even persons who had willingly gone over to the mleccha side were to be considered with sympathy. This was in harmony with the old Vedic rule for the admission of the vrātya to Aryan privileges after a ceremony called vrātya-stoma had been performed. Who are Vrātyas? The conventional explanation was that persons born in the three higher castes who had neglected to undergo upanayana, or to perform Sāvitrī were Vrātyas. A recent writer has made out that the original Vrātyas were a powerful civilised community The common tendency was to equate in Eastern India. Vrātyas, Mleccha and Yavana. Vasistha, Manu and Yājñavalkya had forbidden association with them, intermarriage with them and their admission to Vedic instruction and to religious But they could be purified by Vrātyastoma or by the performance of the Asvameda (Vasistha). The performance of the horse-sacrifice by so many kings of dubious caste in the "dark ages" of our history might probably have been due to this helpful rule. The abduction of women and men, or their being carried into slavery as prisoners of war, must have been an ordiinary incident in the Muhammadan epoch. Why should the attitude be stiffened against the rehabilitation of unfortunate men and women, when their number was so large? Two reasons may be suggested: firstly, whole-sale readmission was viewed differently from isolated cases of readmission, because of the fear of society being swamped by such large-scale reconversion; secondly, the fear of retaliation, directed both against the reconverted persons and against those who made the reconversion. When the power of reprisal was in the hands of a distant enemy it was negligible. But when it lay in men ruling the country, and their religion made apostasy a capital offence, it was to be dreaded. It is noteworthy that S'ivāji readmitted to the Hindu fold his general (Sarnobat) Netāji Pālkar, who for ten years was a Muslim in Afghanistan and had even married a Musalman lady, after being carried away and forcibly converted to Islam. One of the Nimbālkars had become a Muhammadan. S'ivāji had him taken back and even gave him a daughter in marriage. But when it came to his own case, S'ivāji, would take no risks, and conciliated public opinion. He cheerfully underwent expiatory ceremonies as a vrātya, then had his rite of initiation, long intermitted in his family, and was crowned as a Kşatriya king only after these ceremonies had been gone through.

Enough has been said to show the wide-spread feeling in heads of society that social well-being depended on the maintenance, in its purity, of traditional rules, and that the extension of such rules to meet new situations had first to be sanctioned by interpretation made in strict conformity with the prescribed rules and methods of investigation. To a ruler the part of the science of Dharma, which was of the most concern was the general part, and not that section, labelled Rājadharma, which laid down the special duties of his station. Ācara, purification, gifts, and propitiation were directly relevant to his conception of the duties of his office as King. This is why so many treatises on branches, which are so different from what is popularly regarded as politics, were written either by kings, like Ballālasena, or at the instance of kings, like Hemādri's Caturvargacintāmaņī or Jayasimhahalpadruma. We may think that an Indian Rāja would have been attracted by what we feel attracted to, viz. Rājanīti, because it relates to polity. But, we should look at it from his standpoint. In an orthodox palace atmosphere, a prince will imbibe knowledge of the special duties of his future office (kingship) almost with his breath. He will not look for much inspiration or new knowledge of even court etiquette from books written by priests or pandits. He would feel differently towards civil law, and the different departments of activity with which the remaining sections of Dharmas'āstra dealt. This attitude will explain two puzzling features of our Dharma and Nīti literature: viz. (1) the large non-nīti and nonvyavahāra content of Nibandhas written to order; and (2) the fewness, insipidity and unattractiveness of the special treatises on Rājadharma or Rājanīti, particularly when viewed in comparison with their most opulent rival. Among works on Arthasāstra, the only one written by a first-rate statesman was the Kautilīya-Arthasāstra; the others were written by pandits, or composed by pandits and fathered on kings (e.g. Yuktikalpataru of King Bhoja, and Mānasollāsa of King Somesvara of Kalyāṇa). The baffling S'ukranīti is an exception, but its composite character, uncertain age and origin, and mixture of archaism in diction and doctrine with startling modern views, raise special problems of their own. Kāmandaka, Somadeva and Hemacandra were poets as well as pandits. They wrote literary exercises, and aimed at pleasing, and not at contributions to political science. In the same way, the handbooks on $R\bar{a}jadharma$, in the restricted sense, with two exceptions, were composed by paṇḍits: e.g. $R\bar{a}jadharma$ -prakāsa of Mitramisra, $R\bar{a}jan\bar{\imath}timay\bar{\imath}kha$ of Nīlakaṇṭha, and Rajadharma Kaustubha of Anantadeva.

The two exceptions to the unattractiveness of the narrower Rājadharma literature are: (1) the Rājadharma-kāṇda of the Kṛtyakalpataru and (2) the Rājanītiratnākara of Candesvara. The latter has been printed by Dr. K. P. Jayaswal and Dr. A. Bannerji Shastri and has recently passed into a second edition. The former is being edited by me, and will soon be published. Laksmīdhara's work is of importance from several standpoints. He was not only a great and austere Brahman, but he belonged to a family in which high office had descended from father to son. The highest office of his day was that of Mahāsāndhivigrahika, a combination of the cabinet duties of the modern ministers of war, foreign affairs, and home affairs. Laksmidhara's father Hrdayadhara held the office also in the Gāharwār court. Laksmīdhara mentions the admiration which his mastery of law and fact evoked, when he 'summed up' as chief judge (prādvivāka), and his finesse as a minister. Apparently, he passed through the lower appointments before attaining the high office which he held when he wrote the Krtyakalpataru and for which he had to wait till his father vacated it. He was thus a grandee, an inference which is confirmed by his allusion to his many gifts to Brahmans and temples. He represented the flower of the Brahman official hierarchy in his age, unlike his two great contemporaries. Vijñānesvara was not an administrator, and Aparārka was not a Brahman and had also not seen affairs with an intimacy which only a minister can obtain. Candesvara, who came nearly two centuries after Laksmīdhara, is in [many respects an "under-study" to Laksmidhara, from whom he borrows extensively. He too was a nobleman (Thakur), a judge and a minister, as well as a scholar, and writer. But he was not a strottiya like his model, and he served in a small kingdom, unlike Laksmīdhara who served one of the powerful rulers of the time, Govindacandra of Kanauj (A.D. 1104-1154), who, in the length of his reign, the extent of his territory, prowess as a soldier, and distinction as an administrator, vied with his elder contemporaries in the Dakhan and South India, Vikramāditya VI and Kulottunga I. We might justly expect from these two writers a combination of learning and experience in dealing with Rājadharma, in its narrower sense, which cannot be looked for in treatises of Mitramis'ra, Nīlakantha and Anantadeva. Mitramisra does not also need extended consideration, since he has borrowed whole-sale from Laksmīdhara in the most unblushing way.

To take the latter first. Nīlakaṇṭa's Nītimayūkha does not cite Lakṣmīdhara, and is unlike the Kalpataru, from which he does not borrow in this section of his Bhagavanta Bhāskara. It is a jejune compilation unworthy of its author's reputation, and seems to have been put together simply to round off the digest. It borrows its treatment of policy wholesale from Kāmandaka, the sections on omens and prognostications from Varāhamihira, and the section on war from both, besides using Purāṇic literature to some extent. There is no sense of reality behind his statements. His patron was a mere nobleman, and Nīlakaṇṭha himself had no political training. The only topics on which he shows some animation are (1) the discussion whether a non-kṣatriya can be crowned in the old way, a point which he tacitly answers in the affirmative by furnishing a long account of the coronation ceremony, with extracts from the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, and, (2) the consideration of the rule that a Brahman might be killed in self-defence. Nīlakaṇṭha takes the view that motive is insufficient, and that the Brahman must actually attempt murder, before he can be killed. He advocates the use of kūṭa-yuddha, or improper war in certain circumstances, a concession to the lowered moral standard of the day.

Anantadeva's book virtually exhausts itself in three large divisions: architecture, following the injunction that the king should have forts; a treatment of civil and criminal law in their eighteen titles, showing little depth or originality; and a long account of the coronation ceremonies, with a description of the ritual and the mantras to be used on the occasion. book was probably a manual for a small court like that of his patron Bāja Bahadur Candra of Almora (d. 1678). His special individuality appears only in the following. He recognises a polygamous king, with a chief queen for ceremonial purposes, and the possibility of competition to the succession, from the existence of many sons by different mothers. He recommends The cabinet he envisages is a small one and primogeniture. consists of the Minister, the Chief Priest, the Chief Cook and the Astrologer. He attaches importance to the ceremony of coronation and rules that the title of King should be taken only after coronation. It is noteworthy that S'ivāji, from whose dominions Anantadeva's family came, followed this precept, and the official form of dating his reign begins after his coronation in 1674; though he had taken the title of Rājā and declared his independence ten years earlier (1664).

Mitramisra's book is redeemed by two features: its comprehensiveness, due largely to his absorption of virtually the greater part of the work of Laksmidhara; and his great learning, which enables him to add corroboration to what is given in his original. His patron Bīrsingh was given considerable freedom by Jahangir, and used his influence with the emperor to strengthen Hinduism. He was more than a petty ruler. It is possible that Mitramisra's book might have been designed for the guidance of the small kingdom, but the probability is that both the scholar and patron looked for a wider audience. The elaborate description of the coronation of S'ivāji, which we find in the Citnis Bakhar is almost word for word in accord with the rules laid down by Mitramisra, following Laksmidhara, for the coronation of a king. Gāgā Bhaṭṭa (Visvesvara Bhaṭṭa) who officiated as chief priest at the coronation, and received a lakh as his fee (daksinā) must have followed Mitramisra closely. It is also possible that Sawāi Jaisingh of Amber, the soldier-astronomer, who performed an asvamedha and underwent a coronation in accordance with Hindu rites, followed this work. Mitramisra is a man of affairs, but still a man of his age. He discusses the question whether a ruler should be a kṣatriya only or a consecrated kṣatriya, and affirms the second alternative. His doctrines are strictly in accord with Dharmas'āstra. He advocates primogeniture and will not allow partition of a kingdom. His vigilance for the royal fisc is shown by an interpretation of the old rule that the king should make good property lost by theft, to the effect that the liability to the state will not arise where the loss is due to the carelessness of the owner. He shows some originality in the discussion of the theory of Mandala, disagreeing with Kāmandaka in some respects, but it is all mere theory, as in the days of Akbar and Jahangir, there was no scope for foreign policy for a subject Rājā. The Brahmana is permitted to fight in certain emergencies. The duties of the conqueror vis-a-vis the conquered are in accord with tradition and high ethics, and derive some animation from the circumstance that a Hindu prince under the Mughal empire was in the position of a conquered ruler, and that the plea for generous treatment was part of the claim of the surviving Hindu Rājās, whom the Mughal administrators treated as Zamindars.

Candes vara's Rājanītiratnākara was the work of an octogenarian. It has many points of originality. He hardly uses the work of Laksmidhara, from whom he borrows wholesale in his other works; for, in spite of an acknowledgment of his obligation to the older writer, Candesvara does not follow him either as regards his arrangement of topics, or his doctrine. He omits the treatment of various ceremonies prescribed by Laksmidhara and other later writers for the propitiation of unseen powers. His work is more like the political testament of an old statesman, recording his opinion for the benefit of posterity. His own king was a Brahman and he himself was a Thakur. So, he rules that kings might be of any caste. ignores the coronation ceremony, and attaches no special constitutional value to it. He recognises de facto sovereignty, and admits the legitimacy of the conqueror. To impress on the king his very limited scope for capricious action, he argues that the state is a society of all persons concerned, including the halt, the maimed, the helpless, and orphans, and that their interests will be sacrificed in a division of a kingdom. thus just misses anticipating Burke's famous definition. is by no means for royal absolutism, or for breach of Dharma by the king. No man of his age could be. He cites the famous text (anonymous) about the divine character of the people, as a set-off to the theory of the divinity of the king.

Though brief, Candesvara's book displays originality, courage, and unconventionality. It was an after-thought, as he had completed his sketch of Dharmasāstra in seven books, without the need to write specially of king-craft. He would probably not have written even this tract but for the importunity of his sovereign, Bhaves'a.

It only remains to describe the Rājadharama-kalþataru, which may be taken as the locus classicus of this type of literature, regarded whether by itself or in its relation other parts of Dharma in the wider sense. dhara's work is in 14 books. His omission of vyavahāra in the treatment of Rājadharma is part of an outlook which treated all parts of Dharma as Rājadharma. Its omission in Kāmandaka or Mānasollasa will be a defect, unless the works are viewed as popular supplements to Dharma, devoid of any authority. One feature in Laksmidhara is note-worthy. He will not cite any authority that is not recognised as a source of Dharma. He follows in the arrangement of his quotations the order of enumeration of the sources: s'ruti, smṛti, itihāsa, purāṇa and caritra. He assumes a good deal, of what he has said in other sections of his digest. compile a work on polity by Laksmidhara one would have to lay under contribution several sections of his digest; it cannot be written from his 'Rājadharma' alone. Lakṣmīdhara held the responsible position of chief minister to a king, whose power was daily growing, and yet who had to be educated in Hindu Dharma. It is therefore natural that, as in Kautilya's work, he should feel the need to deal with the problems of philosophy and religion, along with administrative organization, recruitment to the king's service, court ceremonial (important in a new dynasty, without tradition), as well as economic development of a large area, just recovering from war, along with traditional treatment of the rules of taxation and economy, and the beneficial relations of the ruler and the ruled. His special "advance" on the Kauṭilīya is his elaboration of the magical and ceremonial rites recommended for the safety of king and kingdom. His reticence about foreign relations of the king is noteworthy, but the omission of the Mandala theory is apparently the caution of the political minister, who will not give himself away. Gāharwār king must have been proud of his kṣatriya lineage. which was questioned. It is proof of Laksmidhara's independence that the rites which he prescribes for the coronation of even a Rajput king are Purānic and not Vedic. this respect he is more consistent than his successors, who indiscriminately mixed up the two, for kings whose claim to be ksatriyas was even more questionable than Govindacandra's. His magnifying the Brahman is consistent with himself and the tradition of the age. In one respect, he strikes an original note. While he will not countenance the use of deception or barbarism in war, he regards it as a game which should be short and sharp; and he accordingly recommends that the civil population of the enemy should enjoy no immunity from attack or destruction of property, as the aim of war is to put the maximum amount of pressure on the enemy and bring him to his knees quickly. He accordingly advises the laying waste of the enemy's territory, and the destruction of the enemy's buildings, water reservoirs, and bridges. But, once an enemy is overcome, the enemy subjects should receive the same considerate treatment as the subjects of the conqueror. Private looting is forbidden in war, and all booty belongs to the king. In civil government, the main principles of Laksmidhara are economy, avoidance of waste, conservation of resources and respect for the expert. Its modern-ness is what one would expect from a responsible and gifted statesman with great experience in governing a large kingdom. That the man of affairs was also a great Brahman was in conformity with a tradition, which refused to divide the functions of life, or accept any suggestion which would view mundane existence as the only one.

A result of the revived interest in legal texts and Arthas'āstra in recent years has been a partial redemption of the reputation of Indians for realism and progressive instincts. But there still lurks a belief that religion and Dharmas āstra strangled the free growth of legal and political institutions, made for inelasticity, and rendered society unable and unfit to readjust itself to changing conditions and needs. The claim of the old Indian norm (Dharma) to be viewed as eternal, infallible and indisputable has been represented as a confession of the want of both the desire and the capacity to move forward. Evidence of such adjustments must force itself on the notice of students of our social history and institutions. It will show that, inspite of the fossilising effect of the norm, the liberal use of fictions enabled some readjustment to be effected. The entire area of a vast literature, which was the creation of religious fervour and an overpowering sense of duty in centuries of kings and thinkers, cannot be summarily condemned as the dismal outpourings of minds in fetters to priest-craft and superstition. Explanations, so facile and so appropriate in a superficial consideration of fragments of a great literature, cannot explain the continued vitality of the culture, and the religious beliefs on which it was based, through centuries of vicissitudes, like foreign invasions, conquest, and wholesale persecution, the like of which has extinguished civilisation in other lands. That a frequently ravaged society was able to maintain its essential unity and cherished ideals and modes of life, through such calamities and through such a long stretch of time, adapting itself, within the limits of its fundamental beliefs, to the calls of altered needs, and that it ensured to its members a considerable degree of happiness and freedom, with the temper to make use of them, are claims which may be urged on behalf of the great body of tradition and literature called Dharmasastra. That a study of its scope, aims and implications, along with that of the ways in which it renewed itself from age to age, may prove of use not only to those who accept it without question, but even to those who ardently wish for social change in the interests of wider well-being, among a vast population in which a great many persons have still the faith in it which will help them more readily to accept change if it is in consonance with tried ideals and methods, is the justification for the review which has been attempted in these lectures of what, from its vital bearing on the prosperity of the land, I have, consistently with tradition, to call Rājadharma.

[The figures at the head of the Notes refer to the pages and lines of the text of the lectures, while the figures on the top of Notes refer to the serial numbers of the Notes, which are given for convenience of cross-reference.]

1

1, last line. STUDY OF ANCIENT INDIAN CULTURE

The first Chair on the subject was founded by the late Mahārāja Manīndracandra Nandi of Cossimbazar. Recently, H. H. the Mahārāja of Baroda has given the University a perpetual grant for the foundation of a Professorship in Ancient Indian Culture and some Fellowships. At Benares candidates can study the subject in all its ramifications from the pass B.A. course to the M.A. and D. Litt. degrees.

2, l. 9

The convention which was set up when the Chair at Madras University was first filled has been maintained with the widening activities of the Department of Indian History. Research more than teaching forms the chief occupation of the staff.

3, 11. 15-16

At Bombay the School of Sociology has produced some useful doctoral theses on Indian Polity and Sociology, marked by scholarship and insight.

2

4, line 23. RAJADHARMA

The term $R\bar{a}jadharma$ is now popularly used in the sense of Polity or $R\bar{a}jan\bar{\imath}ti$. It has been so especially since the study of Ancient Polity was stimulated, if not actually commenced, by the publication in 1909 of Kauṭilya's $Arthas:\bar{a}stra$ and its translation into English. Lawyers have all along been pre-occupied, since the foundation of British Courts of justice in India, with that part of $Vyavah\bar{a}ra$ which deals with inheritance and partition of heritage $(D\bar{a}yabh\bar{a}ga)$. There has been a belief, which is not justified by Indian tradition, that, as the Hindu king was invested with the duty of adjudicating suits of law, the Vyavahāra content of $Dharmas:\bar{a}stra$, and the special rules for the kings and courts alone constitute $R\bar{a}jadharma$. The chief purpose of these lectures is to correct the impressions, to show that they are not in consonance with the traditional view of Hindu life or institutions, and to draw attention to the wider implications of the term.

3

5. The Lecturer's Works

Ancient Indian Polity was published in 1914, and a second edition appeared in 1934. Ancient Indian Economic Thought appeared at Benares in 1935. The Calcutta Readership lectures were named Indian Cameralism, from striking points of resemblance with European Cameralism and the Arthasāstra. Though delivered in 1934, it has yet to be published.

4

6. USE OF THE KAUTILTYA IN MODERN POLITICS

Half in fun and half seriously, European administrators have cited the precepts of Kautilya in legislative debates in support of new taxes and the Criminal Intelligence Department.

5

7, U. 29-30. DHARMAS'ĀSTRA AS PRIESTLY TWADDLE

The Gṛḥya-sūtras, which form part of the $Dharmas:\bar{a}stra$, have been characterised by a hostile critic as 'not only twaddle, but priestly twaddle.' Many of the misconceptions of the nature and content of Dharmas āstra may be traced to the criticisms of Sir Henry Maine, made on the basis of the translation of Manusmṛti by Sir William Jones, and in ignorance of Sanskrit, and almost a comtempt for it.

Some illustrative passages may be cited:

"The religious oligarchies of Asia, either for their own guidance, or for the relief of their memory, or for the instruction of their disciples, seem in all cases to have ultimately embodied their legal learning in a code; but the opportunity for increasing and consolidating their influence was probably too tempting to be resisted. Their complete monoploy of legal knowledge appears to have enabled them to put off on the world, not so much of the rules actually observed as of the rules which the priestly order considered proper to be observed. The Hindoo Code, called the Laws of Manu, which is certainly a Brahman compilation, undoubtedly enshrines many genuine observances of the Hindoo race, but the opinion of the best contemporary orientalists is, that it does not, as a whole represent a set of rules actually administered in Hindustan. It is, in great part, an ideal picture of that which, in the view of the Brahmins, ought to be the law. It is consistent with human nature and with the special motives of their authors that Codes like that of Manu should pretend to the highest antiquity and claim to have emanated in their present form from the Deity. according to Hindoo mythology, is an emanation from the Supreme God; but the compilation which bears his name, though its exact date is not easily discovered, is, in point of the relative progress of Hindoo jurisprudence, a recent production." (Ancient Law, ed. Pollock, 1927, pp. 15-16. The work was published in 1861).

"Hindoo law, which I have placed by the side of Roman law, calls assuredly for no euology. It is full of monstrous iniquities, and has been perverted in all directions by priestly influence. But then a great deal of it is of prodigious antiquity, and, what is more important, we can see this ancient law in operation before our eyes. British legislation has corrected some of its excesses, but its principles are untouched, and are still left to produce some of their results." (Early History of Institutions, 1874, p. 309).

6

8, 11. 1-7. SMALL CONTENT OF LAW AND POLITY IN DHARMAS'ĀSTRA

In Manusmrti only three books, viz. the seventh, eighth and the ninth treat of politics and law proper, and take up about 980 verses against 1580 for the rest. In Yajñavalkyasmṛti, the last (i.e. 13th adhikarana) of the first book, and the whole of the second deal with polity and law, and take up 367 verses out of the total 1009. In the reconstructed Brhaspati-smrti, I have gathered 1288 verses (including some half-s'lokas) on law and polity, as against 1037 on the rest of the normal content of Dharmas astra. As Brhaspati's work concentrates on Vyavahāra, the large content of non-vyavahāra element in it is noteworthy. Parās aras mrti, as is well known, has no Vyavahāra or Rājadharma content, while the extant Nāradsmrti is equally exceptional in having virtually only a vyavahāra element, which is noticeably very small in the Dharmasūtra literature, being relatively most abundant, while still relatively smaller than the non-vyavahāra element in Visnusmrti the only smrti in sūtra form which has relatively a large vyavahāra content.

If we turn to the nibandhakāras, we find that only two out of the fourteen books of the Kalpataru of Laksmidhara are devoted to Rājanīti and Vyavahāra. Jīmūtavāhana's Dāyabhāga was exclusively devoted to a part of vyavahāra, as his Vyavahāra-mātrkā was also, but he recognised the value of the non-vyavahāra element by writing a much larger work on Kālanirnaya, (i.e. the Kālaviveka, Bibliotheca Indica, 1905). His lost Dharmaratna, of which both the Kālaviveka and the Dāyabhāga are declared in their colophons to be parts, will if recovered furnish another illustration of the principle enunciated. (Kane, History of Dharmasāstra, p. 319). Of the twenty-eight tattvas of Ragunandana only two (viz. on dāya and vyavāhara) bear on law proper. Every large and complete digest will furnish similar instances.

7

8, 11. 28-30. HALHED'S CODE

The original of N. B. Halhed's Gentoo Code, published in 1776, was a Persian translation of the Vivādārṇavasetu (Bridge over the Ocean of Litigation) which was composed by a committee of smārtas named in the following sloka, which appears at the end of the printed edition of the work:

Bālesvara-Kṛpārāma-Sāma-Gopāla-Kṛṣṇajīvanākhyaiḥ | Vīresvara-Kṛṣṇacandra-S'rī-Gaurikāntābhidhānaiḥ ṣadbhih ||

Kālas ankara-Syāmas undra-Kṛṣṇakes ava-samgaih | Sītārāmas angais ca kṛto granthaḥ sphuratu sabhāyam ||

There is no mention of the Mahārāja Ranjit Singh of Lahore, to whose inspiration the publisher attributed this work. The Oriental Manuscripts Library at Madras has a copy of this work with the title $Viv\bar{a}d\bar{a}rnava-bhanjana$. It should not be confused with Jagannatha's famous digest, which H. T. Colebrooke translated in 1798. The title of the latter, which is still unpublished, is $Viv\bar{a}da-bhang\bar{a}rnava$.

8

9, l. 2. Colebrooke's Digest

This famous work, which has been extensively used by the British courts was published first in 1797 by H. T. Colebrooke. It is a translation of the sections on contract and succession of a digest specially composed by Jagannātha Tarkapañcānana of Triveņi on the Ganges in 1796. Jagannātha is the last great nibandhakāra. He is said to have died at the great age of 111 in 1806. If it be so, he must have been a centenarian when the digest was composed, a truly remarkable achievement. (B. Banerjee, Dawn of New India, 1927, pp. 81-91).

9

9, First Paragraph. EARLY ENGLISH TRANSLATIONS OF DHARMASASTRA AND WORKS ON HINDU LAW

Sir William Jones translated Manusmrti following Kullüka's commentary, and an edition was published in 1796, after his death. He was responsible for the suggestion to undertake a comprehensive digest, and the Vivādasārārnava of Trivedi Sarvorus'arman was composed accordingly in 1789. Meantime, the Vivādārnavasetu had been compiled in 1773, and was the original of Halhed's Code of Gentoo Laws, 1776, published in 1781. Jagannatha's nibandha was partially translated as 'Digest of Hindu Law' by T. E. Colebrooke, in 1797. Colebrooke published in 1810 his translations of Jimutavāhana's $D\bar{a}yabh\bar{a}ga$ and the $D\bar{a}yabh\bar{a}ga$ section of the Mitāksarā. Borradaile's translation of the Vyavahāramavūkha appeared in 1827. The $D\bar{a}yakramasamgraha$ was translated by P. M. Wynch in 1818. It was by S'rī Kṛṣṇa Tarkālankāra, and an edition of it was published in 1828. The Dattaka-mīmāmsā of Nandapandita and the Dattaka-candrikā of Kubera was published by J. C. C. Sutherland in 1821. Sir Thomas Strange published his Hindu Law in 1825. In 1829 appeared Sir Willaim Hay Macnaghten's 'Principles and Precedents of Hindu Law' in the same year as his father Sir Francis Macnaghten's Considerations on Hindu Law. Goldstücker wrote his Present Administration of Hindu Law, in 1871. Meantime, A. C. Burnell had published a translation of the Dayabhaga section of Madhava's bhasya on Parās arasmrti in 1868, which he followed up by a translation of the same section of Varadarāja's Vyavahāranirnaya, which I am about to publish for the first time. Vācaspati Mis'ra's Vivādacintāmaņi was translated in 1865 by P. C. Tagore, and the sections on inheritance in the Smrticandrikā were translated by T. Krishnaswami Aiyar in 1867. In 1868 Prosonno Coomar Tagore left by will the funds for the foundation of the famous Tagore Law Professorship in the University of Calcutta, and H. Cowell gave in 1870 the first course of lectures under this foundation, and chose Hindu Law as his subject.

10

10, ll. 8-10. Jīmūtavāhana's Interest in Non-Vyavahāra

The colophon to the $D\bar{a}yabh\bar{a}ga$, the most famous work of Jimūtavāhana, ends thus "Dharmaratne $D\bar{a}yabh\bar{a}gah$ samāptah" The same reference to Dharmaratna occurs in the colophon to his $K\bar{a}laviveka$ (Bibliotheca Indica, 1905). The last words in the $K\bar{a}laviveka$ "Samāptamcedam Bhūratne Dharmaratnam" will indicate that this section was the last in the Dharmaratna. The complimentary verse at the end of the section refers to the bigger work and its occurrence at the end of $K\bar{a}laviveka$ will also suggest that the Dharmaratna terminated with the section of $K\bar{a}la$:

Bahuvidha-vivāda-timiragrastam grahaņam raveķ s'as'ānkasya |

Tad-dharmaratnadīpālokāt sakalam vilokayata ||

His Vyavahāramātṛka, which was published by Sir Asutosh Mookerjee in 1912, does not show this reference to Dharmaratna in the colophon, which ends thus:

Iti Pāribhadra Mahāmahopādhyāya S'ri Jīmūtavāhanakṛta Vyavahāramātṛkā samāptā. It is possible that the other sections of the Dharmaratna were never written, though planned.

11

10, II. 10-11. Mādhavācārya's Kālaviveka or Kālanirņaya

The reason given by Mādhavācārya for selecting Parāsarasmṛti for comment is that Parāsara' is work was the most resplendant among smṛti (Smṛti-suṣamā-parās'araḥ) and it was not commented on by any previous writer:

Parās arasmṛtih pūrvair na vyākhyātā nibandhṛbhih | Mayāto Mādhavāryeṇa tad-vyākhyāyām prayatyate. ||

As this smrti does not treat of $k\bar{a}la$, just as it did not treat of $vyavah\bar{a}ra$ and $r\bar{a}jadharma$, Mādhava seems to have felt the need to write a separate treatise on $k\bar{a}la$, as he could not fasten one on a verse in the original, as he did his disquisition on law and government. His action shows how he felt that the treatment of these topics, which were omitted by Parās'ara, were needed to round off the nibandha.

12

10, ll. 14-16. MIXTURE OF SPIRITUAL AND SECULAR PUNISHMENTS IN THE HINDU CRIMINAL CODE

The connection between sin and crime is shown by the view that they are identical, every crime being an offence against God and therefore a sin, and every sin, in primitive society atleast, being an offence against the order established along with the state, and therefore punishable by the state. Sir Henry Maine pointed out in 1861 (Ancient Law, ed. Pollock, p. 381) that primitive jurisprudence knows both sins and torts. "Of the Teutonic codes, it is almost unnecessary to make this assertion, because those codes in the form in which we have received them, were compiled or recast by Christian legislators. But it is also true that non-Christian bodies of archaic law entail penal consequences on certain classes. of acts, and on certain classes of omissions, as being violations of divine prescriptions and commands." The sinful nature of crimes was known to Europe, and is shown by the post-motuary punishments for some classes of crime, like violent robbery, and suicide, by refusal of Christian burial. The Church's refusal of absolution for certain offences is noteworthy.

The relations between spiritual and worldly punishments is explained at some length by J. Jolly, Hindu Law and Custom, pp. 250-270. It is worth studying. Vişnusmrti, 33-42, gives an elaborate catalogue of sins (pātaka), which the king should punish (ib. pp. 250-252.) For an offence there is expiation in two ways, by undergoing punishment at the hands of the king, as bunishment purifies (Manusmrti, VIII, 318) and by performing the prescribed penances, except in cases for which no penance can be prescribed, owing to their moral gravity. Expulsion from society (tyāga) corresponds to excommunication, i.e. out-casting. "In all the smṛtis an elaborate admixture of spiritual and worldly punishments is in evidence." (ib. p. 263) Penance as well as punishment was prescribed for almost all crimes. (ib. pp. 267-268.) It should be noted that the power of the king as the wielder of the 'rod of punishment' and of the community in arranging for readmission after penance, meant a capacity, by refusal of penance or punish. ment, to make the culpability continue in future lives, i.e. after death. A careful calculation of the effects of a punishment of this combined nature in the case of apparently preferentially treated persons, like Brāhmaņas, might show that what appears, in a sceptical age as immunity or special consideration, is in reality a relatively heavy load for the class of apparently exempted offenders.

13

11. II. 5-11. BRAHMANA IMMUNITIES

"Kautilya believes in the immunities of Brahmans in several matters, frees them generally from corporal punishment, only providing that they be branded, or imprisoned in cases of serious crime, exempts their property from escheat and from forced contributions, and even provides for their receiving substantial largesses from the King, in cases where an innocent man has been punished. In these, he is like Manu, though he does not go to the lengths to which Manu would proceed in giving such privileges and immunities. But, Kautilya would apparently not except even Brahmans from the law against suicide, while, in cases of their committing treason he would have them drowned, and he would also allow the Brahman to be killed on the battlefield or in self-defence" (Ancient Indian Polity, pp. 33-34. In II. i of the Arthasastra fines. are prescribed to those, who, though able to do so, do not support (a-bibhratah syaktimato) a number of named dependants like children, wife, parents, brothers under age, and sisters who are unmarried or have been widowed, but it is expressly stated that this injunction will not apply to claims for maintenance from these if they are out-castes or apostates (anyatra patitebhyah), but an exception to the saving clause is in favor of the mother (anyatra matuh). In the Sukranīti (IV, i, ll. 194-22) occurs a long catalogue of persons whom the king is enjoined to punish, and among them are the atheist $(n\bar{a}stikah)$ and the blasphemer $(Deva-d\bar{u}sakah)$. Mahāmahopadhyāya R. Shama Sastri has misunderstood the rule, and states that the failure of the mother and the apostate tomaintain their dependants is not punishable!

14

11, U. 13-21. ALLEGED SECULAR NATURE OF ARTHAS'ASTRA

See pp. 38-40, Ancient Indian Polity, where many instances are cited to show the sacerdotalism of the Arthasāstra of Kautilya, the most illustrious of its class. From the standpoint of Dharmasāstra.

According to the Caraṇavyūha of S'aunaka, Arthas'āstra is an Upa-Veda of Atharva-veda. The Atharva Veda is recognised as one of the four Vedas, which form the fourteen sources (sthānāni) of Dharma in Yājñavalkya, I, 3. As Aparārka points out, if the number fourteen was not specified, and the Vedas were mentioned as Trayī, the Atharva-Veda would have lost its place as a source (p. 6: Caturdasa grahaṇādrte Atharva-veda-samgraho na syāt.) The enumeration of another four, to make up eighteen "sources," by Viṣṇupurāṇa is dismissed by Aparārka with the observation that it catalogues the sources of vidyā not dharma.

In the four $Arthas \bar{a}stra$ is named last. The $Arthas \bar{a}stra$ is also included in $Itih\bar{a}sa-pur\bar{a}na$, thus bringing it into the canon of Dharma. The authors of $Dharma-prad\bar{\nu}pa$ have erred in suggesting that $Arthas \bar{a}stra$ is of no canonical authority, and that therefore the dictum ' $R\bar{a}j\bar{a}$ $k\bar{u}lasya$ $k\bar{u}ranam$ ' being an $Arthas \bar{u}stra$ dictum (!) should not be accepted, (p.15). The sentence occurs in a famous passage in the $M\bar{u}habh\bar{u}rata$, to which $Dharmaprad\bar{u}pa$ will not deny validity.

Manu denied the right to expound or study the Dharmasāstra to non-Brāhmaṇas (II, 16-17):

Nişekādi smas ānānto mantraih yasyodito vidhih \\
Tasya s āstre adhikārosmin jīteyo nānyasya karhicit \|
Vidusā brāhmanena idam adhyētavyam prayatnatah \\
Sişyebhyasca pravaktavyam samyak nānyena kenacit \|

The Chāndogya Upaniṣad (III, iv, 1-3,) equates Itihāsa-Purāṇa with the Atharva-veda, but they are open (according to S'ankara, Vedānta-sīutras, XXXIV, S.B.E., p. 229,) to all four castes.

15

12, l. 7 ff. Toleration of Heresy and Heterodoxy

Three inscriptions of As'oka in the Barābar hill show that in the thirteenth and twentieth years of his reign he bestowed the rock-cut caves to the heretical Brāhmaṇa sect of the Ājīvakas. (Smith, Asoka, p. 144, ed. 1901). The Vahiyakā inscription of his grandson Das'aratha states that immediately after his accession he bestowed "on the venerable Ājīvakas" the cave "to be a dwelling place for them as long as the sun and the moon endure." (ib. p. 145).

The Ājīvakas are known only from their rivals the Jains and the Buddhists. Gos'ala Mankaliputta, the contemporary of Mahāvīra and at one time his follower, is said to have led the Ājīvakas at the time. They seem to have held that the soul had color (Radhakrishnan, Indian Philosophy, I, 1940, p. 292n) and also the atomic hypothesis (ibid., II, 194n).

Manusmṛti (IV, 61) refers to pāṣaṇḍi-gaṇa (association of heretics). Yājñavalkya, II, 192 provides for the maintenance of the regulations of their guilds:

Sreni-naigama-pāṣaṇḍi-gaṇānāmapyayam vidhiḥ | Bhedam caiṣām nṛpo rakṣet, pūrvavṛttim ca pālayan. ||

Nārada and Kātyāyana repeat the rule (vide my Ancient Indian Economic Thought, 1934, p. 184 where their words are cited), Medhātithi (on Manu, IV, 30), Vijñānesvara (II, 192) and Kullūka on Manu, (IV, 30) define the pāṣanḍa as one who rejects the Veda, and so the Buddhists and Jains were also brought into the category. It is possible that the reference in Manu is to monasteries of Buddhists and Jains. The audience to petitioners precedes the inquiry by the king into their affairs. Kauṭilya (p. 39) advises the king to deal personally with the affairs of gods, heretics, learned Brāhmaṇas, cattle, sacred places, minors, the aged, the afflicted, the helpless and women, in the order of enumeration.

Tasmād devatās rama-pāṣaṇḍa-s rotriya - pas u - puṇyasthānānām bāl-vṛddha-vyādhita-vyasinyanāthānām strīṇām ca krameṇa kāryāṇi pas yet.

For the king's studies see Ancient Indian Polity, p. 39, note 63.

16

13, 11. 4-9. DIFFERENTIATION BETWEEN SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS LAW

The Arthas āstra distinguishes the courts as Dharmasthīya and Kanṭakas odhana, and the third and fourth books of the Kauṭilīya are devoted to them. In regard to the treatment of subjects, there is little difference between Kauṭilya and the smṛtis, and it may be therefore assumed that he followed only the Dharmas āstra. The differences between him and Yājñavalkya are for instance inconsiderable. The Dharmasthīya courts dealt not only with the civil matters included in the usual "eighteen titles of law," but also sāhasam (violent crime) and assault (daṇḍa-pāruṣya). Theft had a great extension given to it by construction, so as to include abduction, on the principle that it is the theft of a human being, (Manu, VIII, 317) cheating in trade, (Yājnavalkya, II, 257) substitution of an article in deposit (ib. 246-247), and combinations of traders to raise prices (held again to be deceitful, ib. 249-250). The Kanṭakasodhana courts dealt with such civil matters as the affairs of artisans, labourers and merchants, and offences against police regulations such as those relating to prostitutes. Capital punishment cases came under them, as did all police and magisterial enquiries and investigations. It is clear that roughly the difference was that between the courts of a judge and a magistrate in British India today. The differentiation was not made on the ground of secularity or religion. (vide, Jayaswal, Manu and Yājnavalkya, pp. 116-7) and V. R. Ramachandra Dikshitar, Mauryan Polity, pp. 160-164.

Not only therefore is there no clear distinction between religious. and secular law, which in the circumstances we can not expect, but the lines of demarcation between crime and civil wrong is not In most crimes, the offender has not only to undergo punishment by fine etc. but he incurs the liability to pay to the injured party due compensation. The underlying idea is that they are not public offences but private injuries. Offences against the spirit of religion take the place of grave crimes against the state. This is the ground of the serious view taken of adultery and offences against women. The original punishment for adultery had been death, but Kautilya reduced it to imprisonment and fine (op. cit., p. 228). rule in Sukranīti making adultery and offences against women crimes in which the king prosecutes (IV, v, 83 ff.) is the result of viewing them as grave moral offences, likely to lead to varnasamkara. It would appear superficially that, (as suggested by Mr. C. S'ankararāma S'āstri, Fictions in the Hindu Law Texts, 1926, p. 35,) contrary to Sir Henry Maine's generalisation, criminal law in India was the creature of civil law. The correct view is to regard both as the creatures of Dharma.

13, 11. 9-11. DIVINITY OF PUNISHMENT OR DANDA

This is indicated in Manusmṛti, VII, 14 and Yājñavalkya, I, 353.

Taysārthe sarva-bhūtūnām goptāram dharmamātmajam | Brahmatejomayam Dandamasrjat pūrvam Isvarah || and Dharmo hi Danda-rūpena Brahmanā nirmitah purā |

18

13. IL. 13-14. VEDIC BASIS OF HINDU LAW

The assumption that not only all law and usage but all knowledge is enshrined in the Veda, leads to the conclusions that (1) there should be internal consistency in law, (2) the differences which appear are resolvable by enquiry, and (3) for every rule of law a vedic basis can be discovered. As the Veda is eternal, omniscient and infallible, and the Vedas have no limit (anantā vai vedāh), it should be possible to say of them what was claimed for the Mahābhārata (I, lxii, 26) viz., 'what is not here is nowhere else' (van nehāsti na kutracit). The Mimāmsa school held 'the Vedas entirely and exclusively concern themselves with Dharma,' Dharma being defined by Jaimini in his second aphorism as 'that which is signified by a direction and leads to a benefit '(Codanālaksanārtho dharmah). When one is unable to find Vedic authority for a rule, he would assume that the siruti had passed out of view (utsanna, lost) or is hidden (bracchanna), and the sruti text will come to view if diligently searched for. A bhāsyakāra's skill and learning are shown by his discovery of the texts which refer to the matters dealt with. Medhātithi and Vīs'varūpa display the capacity, and particularly the latter, of whose work a modern writer has remarked that it "seems to have been written with the set purpose of establishing the Vedic origin of the Smrtis." (Fictions in Hindu Law Texts, p. 79).

"When it is said that the Vedas are the source of Dharma, it is not meant that the Vedas lay down precepts or injunctions (vidhi) on points of Hindu Law, as later works like Manusmrti or Yājñavalkyasmrti do. All that is meant is that the Vedas contain incidental references to matters that are of interest to students of. Hindu Law, that they take certain facts as well-known and make use of them for various purposes. The information that is contained in the Vedas on matters of Hindu Law is in the nature of what are known as arthavādas in the Mimāmsa system. As arthavādas form a syntactical unity with the positive injunctions (vidhis) laid down in the Vedas, they are authoritative. They indicate with sufficient clearness what the state of things then was. If one were to collect together the scattered Vedic texts on such topics of Hindu Law as marriage, adoption, joint family, partition, inheritance, strīdhana, he would find that the information is of considerable importance and is not quite so meagre as one is apt to suppose. The conclusion will irresistibly force itself upon us that the foundations of the Hindu Law are deeply laid in the Vedic age itself, that the peculiar characteristics that distinguish the Hindu Law of modern times from other systems of law had their germ in the Vedic period and that later Hindu jurists were not wrong when they relied upon the Veda as the first source of Dharma." Mr. P. V. Kane, who has made the above observations, has collected a number of illustrations in justification of the conclusions in a valuable paper on the Vedic Basis of Hindu Law, published in 1939.

19

13, U. 14-15. DOCTRINE OF OPTION (VIKALPA)

The option or vikalpa can only be when there is a conflict between two vedic passages, and not when a smṛti rule runs against a sṛuti, because the latter over-rides the former. But it is open to argue that with due diligence a sṛuti-pramāṇa may be discovered for the smṛti rule in question. To assume otherwise will lead to the summary and easy rejection of many smṛti rules on the ground of their not being traced to sṛuti. This is the orthodox Mimāmsaka standpoint, which further is that action in such a case should be suspended pending the discovery (Fictions in Hindu Law Texts, p. 116).

20

13, Il. 16-27. CONFLICTS OF LAW NOT REAL

Strict interpretation according to $M\bar{\imath}m\bar{a}msa$ will hold all conflict to be apparent only and not real, because of the canonical authority claimed for both $Arthas\bar{a}stra$ and $Dharmas\bar{a}stra$. But such a possibility is envisaged in the smrti texts on conflicts of laws. e.g. Yājñavalkya's dictum (II, 21):

Arthasastrāt-tu balavad dharmasāstram iti sthitih

The same principle is enunciated by Nāradasmṛti (I, 99):

Yatra vipratipattis-syāt dharmas/āstrā-rthas/āstrayoḥ | Arthas/āstroktamutsrjya dharmas/āstroktamācaret ||

The doctrine of infallibity of the common source of both $s'\bar{a}stras$ might justify the conclusion that s'ruti can not be opposed to equity and logic $(ny\bar{a}ya)$ and the position taken by Kautilya in the following passage:

S'āstram vipratipadyetā dharma-nyāyena kenacit | Nyāyas-tatra pramāṇam syāt, tatra paṭho hi nasyati || See Ancient Indian Polity, pp. 164-172.

The facile assumption that $Arthas:\bar{a}stra$ is an inferior authority and should therefore be overlooked when it runs counter to $Dharmas:\bar{a}stra$ is repugnant to the orthodox tradition. Accordingly, in explaining the dictum of Yājñavalkya (II, 21) the $Mit\bar{a}ksar\bar{a}$ maintains that the word " $arthas:\bar{a}stra$ " in the rule is not to well-known writers like Us'anas (S'ukra) but to the $arthas:\bar{a}stra$ contained in $Dharmas:\bar{a}stra$ works. If there is a conflict within the $Dharmas:\bar{a}stra$ between the two classes of rules, the Dharmas rule should prevail. He illustrates it by two cases. (1) Manu (VIII, 350-351) enjoins the summary killing of an atatayin (manifest assassin, and his like) even if he be a learned Brāhmana. To act on the direction will be to go against a rule of Manu (XI, 89) that there is no expianation for the deliberate killing of a Brahmana. The former is an artha text, which should give way to the latter, a Dhārma rule. The reconciliation comes from taking the reference to the learned Brāhmana $\bar{a}tat\bar{a}yin$ as a rhetorical statement emphasising the force of the injuction on the treatment of assassins, patent and constructive, and applying the dictum to cases other than those of Brāhmanas. (2) Yājñavalkva, I, 352 gives a rule of prudence, viz. that the making of a friend is better than the acquisition of land and wealth, but he has also the high moral rule (II, 1) that free from anger and covetousness the judge should decide in accordance with Dharmasastra. If a wealthy suitor is to be unjustly favored, the first rule may be observed, but it should not, being an artha precept opposed to a dharma rule.

Vijñānes'vara in discussing the texts dealing with gains of science, etc. (II, 118-119), which, if acquired without detriment to ancestral property (pitr-dravyāvirodhena), belong to the acquirer and cannot be claimed by co-parceners, states that the section of the code is full of texts based on worldly experience:

Lokasiddhasya anuvādakānyeva prāyeņa asmin prakaraņe vacanāni.

21

14, l. 10. Schools of Arthas'āstra

There was no appreciable development of the subject after Kautilya. He cites seventeen authorities. See Ancient Indian Polity, p. 50. Among them are writers with names which became famous in smṛti literature, like Kātyāyana, Nārada, Parās'ara and Bṛhaspati. It is not improbable that the same writers could have written on both sāstras.

14, l. 11. Application of Mimāmsa to Dharmas'āstra AND ARTHASĀSTRA

Bhaṭṭasvāmin's commentary on the Kauṭilīya of which a fragment has been edited (Jayaswal and Banerji-Sastri, Patna, 1926) shows familiarity with Mīmāmsa methods of interpretation. Sankarārya's commentary on Kāmandakīya Nītisāra (ed. Gaṇapati S'āstri, 1912) shows similar training. But they are inferior to great commentators like Medhātithi, Vis'varūpa and Vijñānes'vara, and even to men like Nandapaṇḍita.

23

14, U. 17-18. ARTHAS'ASTRA CORE OF SMRTIS

There is a good deal of Arthas āstra in Manu, and even more of it in Yājñavalkya, with whose code Jolly made a detailed comparison of the Kautilīya (Z. D. M. G., 1913, pp. 43-96) collecting in an appendix parallels from the smṛtis to over 200 passages of the Arthas āstra. Kautilya's doctrines are not merely more like those of Yājñavalkya than those of any other smṛti, but the points of verbal identity are greater between the two. Jolly held that Kauṭilya was the borrower. I have shown grounds for thinking otherwise. See Ancient Indian Polity, pp. 34-37.

24

14, ll. 14-16. Bramanical Reaction from the First Century a.d. Favors Dharmas'āstra

In an epoch of Vedic revival and sacrifices, the Mīmāmsaka finds the attraction of the smṛti and the Kalpasūtras greater than that of the Arthasāstra. He specializes in Vedic exegesis (e.g. S'abarasvāmin, Kumārila). He states emphatically that as "the Veda is the only source of Dharma, so Dharma is the only topic dealt with by the Veda, (S'ankararama S'āstri, op. cit., p. 52). Bhāṣya, Samgraha, and Nibandha forms of composition rapidly progress with the means supplied by Mīmāmsa for subtle and exact analysis and interpretation. The comparative study of smṛtis gains ground.

14, Il. 20-22. Kāmandaka's Nītisāra

Kāmandaka attempts to write his book in $K\bar{a}vya$ style. In fact, his commentator, S'ankarārya regarded it as a $mah\bar{a}\cdot k\bar{a}vya$ and made his comments on the assumption. Not only does Kāmandaka use the ordinary anusthup metre, but he tries more ornate metres also. Though he begins with a panegyric on Visnugupta (i.e. Kautilya), his book is not a summary of the $Kautil\bar{z}ya$, of which not over-much use is made. Kāmandaka apparently intended his work to be an $artha-samhit\bar{a}$, just as the Manusmrti is a $dharma-samhit\bar{a}$. The $N\bar{z}tis\bar{a}ra$ is divided into sargas or cantos like a classical poem. It begins with the praise of the king, and was apparently not familiar with other forms of Government:

Rājāsya jagato hetur vṛddher-vṛddhābhisammataḥ | Nayanāndajananaḥ s'as'ānka ive toyadheḥ ||

The second line, which states that the king delights the eye as the moon gladdens the ocean, appears to contain a half-veiled reference to Candragupta II, the son and successor of Samudragupta. Sasānka is Candra, and Toyadhī is Samudra.

The $N\bar{\imath}tis\bar{a}ra$ is generally supposed to be a work of the Gupta epoch. Formichi (cited in Sarkar's Hindu Positivism, p. 385) would assign its composition to the third or fourth century A. D. He regards it as anterior to the Bṛhat-samhitā of Varāhamihira (sixth century). Formichi's estimate will fit in with my suggestion that the $N\bar{\imath}tis\bar{a}ra$ is a work of the time of Candragupta II.

Kāmandaka's simile will recall to one's mind Kālidāsa's verse (Raghuvamsa, III, 41).

Nivātapadmastimitena cakṣuṣā nṛpasya kāntam pibataḥ sutānanam |

Mahodadheḥ pūra ivendu-darsanāt guruḥ prahaṛsaḥ prababhūva nātmani ||

See below the note to p. 56, 22 29-30.

17, 11., 8-9. STTRA FORM OF COMPOSITION

Dr T. W. Rhys Davids pointed out in the introduction to his translation of the Dialogues of the Buddha (I, pp. xx-xxii) that the chief characteristic of the sūtra was that it was not intended to be read but to be memorised. See also, E. J. Rapson, Ancient India, 1914, pp. 76-77 and my Ancient Indian Polity, pp. 19-20. The use of the sūtra form was dictated by considerations of economy, oral transmission, and secrecy.

27

17, ll. 21-25. Formal Public Recitations of Sūtras

The Buddhists having adopted the $s\bar{u}tra$ form for their sacred canon were obliged, like the Brahmanas when they devised means for the accurate preservation and transmission of the Veda, to resort to public recitations in their convocations of the suttas of the Tripitaka. The permutations of syllables in different forms $(p\bar{a}tha)$ by which the Vedas were conserved, were not adopted by the Buddhists as their suttas would not lend themselves, by lack of accentuation, to such devices. A $s\bar{u}tra$ work will be often nothing more than a list of headings. The late Mahāmahopādhyāya T. Gaṇapati S'āstri suggested that in the $Kautil\bar{v}va$ the $s\bar{u}tras$ were all in the adhikarana-samuddes in the first chapter, and that the rest of the book was Kautilya's own commentary on them, as he had declared that in order to avoid in the case of his work the errors of commentators he had himself composed both the $s\bar{u}tra$ and the commentary.

28

18, U. 7-10. LOST SMRTI-BHĀSYAS

Vide, Kane, op. cit., p. 724 (Yajñasvāmin's bhāsya on Vāṣisṭha-Dharmasūtra mentioned by Govindasvāmi in his commentary on Bodhāyana-Dharmasūtra, II, 2, 51); p. 248 and p. 680 on Asahā-ya's bhāṣyas on Gautama and Manu; the loss of the other commentaries is inferential.

29

18, II. 10-15. DISTANCE OF TIME BETWEEN SMRTIS AND COMMENTARIES

Karka, the commentator on the $s\overline{u}tras$ of Pāraskara is a writer of about A.D. 1000, while his text belongs to the $s\overline{u}tra$ age. Maskarin, the commentator of $Gautamadharmas\overline{u}tra$ (one of the oldest) belongs probably to the same period as Karka. Haradatta, who wrote commentaries on the $s\overline{u}tras$ of \overline{A} pastamba and the $Grhyas\overline{u}tra$ of $\overline{A}s$ valāyana and the $Dharmas\overline{u}tra$ of \overline{G} autama, must have been separated by over twelve centuries atleast from his originals.

30

19, 11. 5-10. Kauțilya's own Bhāşya on the Arthas'āstra

See Note 27 supra. The search for a lost bhāṣya of Kauṭilya is unnecessary in view of Dr. Gaṇapati Sāstri's convincing explanation. The declaration of Kauṭilya occurs at the end of his work; (p. 429).

Drştvā vipratipattim bahudhā s'āstreşu bhāşyakārāṇām \
Svayameva Visnuguptas-cakāra sūtram ca bhāsyam ca ||

Even if this verse is not Kautilya's, it will have to be accepted as representing an authentic tradition.

31

20, 11. 1-5. Mādhava's Treatment of Vyavahāra and Rājadharma

This portion of his commentary stands out of the main $bh\bar{a}sya$ like an appendix, which it is. It is virtually a separate nibandha A similar South Indian nibandha on $Vyavah\bar{a}ra$, not tacked on to smṛti like Mādhava's, is Varadarāja's Vyavahāranirṇaya, which I am about to publish.

32

20, Il. 6-7. RECENT BHĀSYAS AND NIBHANDHAS

Mahārāja S'arabhoji of Tanjore (A.D. 1798-1833), who had left himself no kingdom to govern, compiled a digest on civil law named Smṛtisāra-samuccaya. The second Maharājā of Kāṣmir and Jammu, Ranbīr Singh (A.D. 1857-1885) commissioned a nibandha of which the Prāyasccitta-kāṇḍa was completed and published. It contains over 40,000 granthas. Ācarendu of Nārāyaṇa (printed by the Ānandās'ṇama) was written in A.D. 1838 (Kane, op. cit., p. 514).

The famous $B\bar{a}lambhattva$ on the $Mitakṣar\bar{a}$ was composed by Balakṛṣṇa alias Bālambhatta Pāyaguṇḍe at Benares towards the end of the eighteenth century. The date of the writer is given by the late Babu Govinda Das as 1740-1830. He was known to Colebrooke. Kes'avadāsa composed between 1770 and 1830 the digest $Ahalv\bar{a}$ - $k\bar{a}madhenu$, so named so after Ahalvā Bai Holkar. Warren Hastings, Sir William Jones and H. T. Colebrooke were responsible for getting written the $Viv\bar{a}d\bar{a}rnavasetu$, (1773), $Viv\bar{a}das\bar{a}r\bar{a}rnava$ (1789) and $Viv\bar{a}da$ - $bhang\bar{a}rnava$ (before 1796) by a board of pandits, Sarvorus'arman Trivedi and Jagannātha Tarkapañcānana respectively.

33

20, ll. 26-29. Non-inclusion of Yājñavalkyasmṛti in "the Sacred Books of the Ēast" Series

A translation of Yājāavalkyasmṛti was advertised in the series in 1876 (p. xlvi of Vol I.) and it is not clear why it was dropped. Max Müller's Life and Autobiography throw no light on the cause of the omission. Perhaps it was dropped owing to the publication of V. N. Mandlik's translation in 1880.

34

20, U. 28-32. Attitude of Indian Courts to Dharmas'āstra

A criticism of my observation that revived interest in the sources of Hindu law is due to Indian judges and lawyers possessed of a knowledge of Sanskrit is that Indian judges have been often more anxious to ignore the sources and change the law than European judges. There is an element of truth in the criticism. Hindu law is parting more and more from the traditional law through judicial interpretation chiefly; and such interpretations are due as often to the importation of exotic notions into Hindu jurisprudence as to the wish to bring law into conformity with the "modern conscience." Sir Henry Maine was never tired of attacking European judges in India as being more scrupulous about the religion and the religious usages of Hindus than the Hindus were. The following is a sample of his attack. "It has been said by an eminent Indian lawyer that, when the judges of the Sudder Courts were first set to administer native law, they appear to have felt as if they had got into fairyland, so strange and grotesque were the legal principles on which they were called upon to act. But after a while they were accustomed to the new region, and began to behave themselves as if all were real and substantial. As a matter of fact they acted as if they believed in it more than did the native inhabitants." (Village Communities, p. 45) J. H. Nelson, like Maine, attacked the substitution by the courts of smrti law for customary law, which alone should be upheld for castes other Brāhmana (see Nelson's View of the Hindoo Law and his Scientific Study of the Hindu Law, 1881).

35

21, U. 1-3. COLEBROOKE'S STUDY OF MĪMĀMSA

See Max Mueller, Chips from a German Workshop, IV, pp. 377-433, containing his review (1872) of the Life of Colebrooke. Colebrooke is said to have preferred to remain undisturbed as Judge at Mirzapur, owing to its nearness to Benares from which he was able to obtain both pandits to guide his studies and manuscripts for study. His study of Mīmāmsa probably began even earlier as he had recognised the necessity for a mastery of it for understanding the texts of Hindu law. "The disquisitions of Mīmāmsa", he pointed out years later in his paper subject (Miscellaneous Essays. Madras Vol. I, pp. 295-324), "bear a certain resemblance to juridical questions: and, in fact, the Hindu law being blended with the religion of the people, the same modes of reasoning are applicable, and are applied to the one as to the other. The logic of Mīmāmsa is the logic of law; the rule of interpretation of civil and religious ordinances. Each case is examined and determined upon general principles; and from the cases decided the principles may be collected. A well-ordered arrangement of them would constitute the philosophy of law; and this is, in truth, what has been attempted in the $M\bar{\imath}m\bar{a}msa$." (op. cit., p. 317).

36

21, ll. 16-17. Allegation of Priestly Influence on Hindu Law

Sir Henry Maine regarded the Hindu law of stridhana as having been tampered with by Brāhmaṇa jurists (vide, Early History of Institutions, pp. 321-36). He concludes: "These inquiries, pushed much further, have shown that the Hindu laws, religious and civil, have for centuries been undergoing transmutation, development, and, in some points, depravation at the hands of successive Brahmanical expositors, and that no rules have been so uniformly changed—as we should say for the worse—as those which affect the legal position of women."

37

21, Il. 22-24. S'ABARA'S MODERNITY IN CRITICISM

In commenting on Baudhāyana's famous prescription of celibacy for forty years (brahmacarya) (II,1), S'abara suggests that the rule was possibly introduced into Baudhāyana's $s\bar{u}tra$ by an impotent person who wished to conceal his defect. He remarks that the smrti text 'the food of the sacrificer who has bought soma deserves to be eaten $(kr\bar{\iota}tar\bar{u}jako\ bhojy\bar{u}nnah$ ' as due to one in starvation. A smrti rule declaring that the adhvaryu in entitled to the cloth used in the $Vaisarjana\ homa$ is characterised by S'abara as due to priestly avarice. Again he rejected some smrtis and accepted others, anticipating the modern method.

(See Fictions in Hindu Law Texts, pp. 100-101)

38

21, Il. 23-24. KAUTILYA AND HIS GURU

Kauţilya cites the views of his teacher, to whom he shows reverence in Hindu style by referring to him not by name but by the word $Ac\bar{a}rya$ in the honorific plural, as many as thirty-nine times, and each citation is for the purpose of dissenting from the teacher's views. The references are collected on pp, 177-179 of Dr. Shama Sastri's Index Verborum to the Arthasāstra.

39

23, Para 1. Criticised Views on the Nature of Dharmas'astra

(1) J. J. Meyer (Altindischen Rechts-schriften, Leipzig, 1927, pp. 86-88) holds that smṛti literature, does not offer anything like a development of secular law, but represents the slow incorporation of secular law, which had its birth and development in a different milieu into Brahmanical works. He is apparently thinking of the older sūtras with an insignificant legal content, for which the explanation is that the law proper was preserved only in recollection and was unwritten. The procedure in judicial trials emphasises the functions of the sabhyas, or assessors, whose selection according to different vedic sāhhas, implies the utilisation of divergent types of remembered rules. The sabhyas really decided the suit, the presiding judge merely conducting the trial and the king delivering and carrying out the judgment.

Meyer also holds that smṛtis merely represent a literature of magic, and objects to their being described as law-books. But he overlooks the fact that what society enforces is law, and that there is no evidence that "secular" law developed first through Arthas āstra and then crept into smṛti.

For Benoy Kumar Sarkar's views that Arthasāstra is "public" while Dharmasāstra is "private" law (which overlooks the close connection in India between state and family, and the duty of the state to correct and punish irregularities in family life) and that Arthasāstra is real-politik, while Dharmasāstra represents only pious wishes (an old view of Maine), see his Hindu Positivism, and particularly, pp. 203 and 251. For his conception of Dharmasāstra as a 'hotch-patch of materials emanating from different sources and reflecting life and history', see ib. p. 197. Even in modern polity and law there is an element of idealism. It was much more so in ancient institutions. Breloer's view that Arthasāstra is "planned economy," apparently suggests a human planner. In a wider sense Dharma is planned economy but the author is held to be the Supreme Being.

40

24, U. 9-16. Jayaswal's Views of the Difference between Arthas'āstra, Dharmas'āstra and Rājanīti

They are expressed in his Manu and Yājñavalkya. To him artha-s'āstra and daṇḍanīti are identical and constitute "secular" law (pp. 5, 7, 9, 16, 25, 26, 41, 42, 50, 84, 93, 263, and 273). He thinks that artha law was known as vyavahāra in the time of Gautama (p. 16) and that it is not the same as dharma law (p. 17). The distinction rests on a hypothesis of a differentiation of secular and religious sides in Hindu life for which there is no warrant in the Kauṭilīya. His statements rest on no secure authority. e.g., 'Dharma is penance law" (p. 13); "vyavahāra is municipal law and secular law" (p. 13); and " $r\bar{a}j\alpha n\bar{\imath}ti$ is constitutional law" (p. 255).

B. K. Sarkar has a glimpse of the truth when he states: "In a sense, every student of Dharmas'āsta was a student of Rājadharma, "and on the other hand every student of Rājadharma, Nītis'āstra Daṇḍanīti or Arthas'āstra was a student of Dharmasāstra from the earliest history." (op. cit. p. 514).

41

24, ll. 16-20. The Way of the Māhājana the Path of Dharma

The famous sloka on the subject occurs in the Yakşa-pras'na' ($Mah\bar{a}bh\bar{a}rata$, Vanaparva, ch. 314, sl. 119, Kumbakonam edn.).

It runs thus:

Tarko apratisthah srutayo vibhinnā
Naiko munir yasya matam pramāṇam |
Dharmasya tatvam nihitam guhāyām
Mahājāno yena gatah sa panthāh ||

 $M\bar{a}h\bar{a}jana$ does not mean, as it has sometimes been interpreted in recent times, the leader of a popular assembly. It stands for sista or $s\bar{a}dhu$, whose $\bar{a}c\bar{a}ra$ (usage) is one of the recognised sources of Dharma. (Manu, II, 6; Yājñavalkya, I, 7.)

42

24-25. Connotation of Dharma

The discussion of what constitutes Dharma in Vīramitrodaya Paribhāṣāprakās'a (pp. 26-32) is illustrative. The Kalpataru also begins with such a disscussion.

Āpastamba (I, 20, 6) says:

Na dharmādharmau carata 'Āvām sva'iti; na deva-gan dharvā na pitaraḥ ācakṣate 'Ayam dharmo, ayam adharma'iti.

"Dharma and adharma do not wander about saying 'Here we are'; nor do the gods nor the Manes nor the Gandharvas declare 'this is Dharma, this is A-dharma.'

The Naiyāyika definition of Dharma is that it is a quality of the Soul (Ātmaguṇau dharmādharmau). It is invisible, and has to be inferred. Dharma is what is done by enjoined action, and is a quality of men. (Vihitakriyayā sādhyo dharmah pumso guṇo matah). The view of the Mīmāmsa is contained in Jaimini's definition "that which is signified by a command and leads to a benefit is termed Dharma." (Codanālakṣaṇārtho dharmah). According to Kumārila, both the act enjoined by and the material connected with it come within the scope of Dharma. The Naiyāyikas hold that Dharma carries with it the idea that an invisible (adṛṣṭa) effect known as apūrva attaches to the soul from the performance of a religious act, and that it lasts until the benefit contemplated by the act is attained.

The ways in which the different schools elaborated the idea may be gathered from their summary in Mahāmahopādhyāya Bhīmācārya Jhālkikar's Nyāyakos'a, 3rd edn., 1928, pp. 386-388.

See Dr. Ganaganāth Jha's introduction to his translation of the Slokavārtika of Kumārila (Bibliotheca Indica, 1900-1908). pp. v-xviii.

43

26, first para. Classifications of Dharma

The classification in the text follows the Mitākṣarā, on Yājña-valkya, I, 1. See my Ancient Indian Polity, p. 89.

44

26, ll. 14-16. DHARMA COMPREHENDS ALL KNOWLEDGE

There are two fundamental hypotheses, viz., that the Veda is the source of all knowledge and that its draws it authority from itself (svatah pramāṇam). They relieve the Mīmāmsaka of the onus of proving the doctrine and lay upon the opponent ($p\overline{u}rva-pakşa$) the burden of disproving it, if he could. The self-evident nature of the Veda implies that it is valid by itself. But as knowledge springs from the Veda alone, all knowledge is valid. As Dharma is the only subject of s'ruti, i.e., the Veda, Dharma embraces all knowledge. Vijñānes'vara in commenting on $Y\overline{a}j\overline{n}a-valkya$, II, 21, says.

Dharmas āstrāntargatameva rājanīti-lakṣaṇam arthas āstram iha vivakṣitam.

45

26, ll. 19-25. The Vidyāsthānas or Dharmasthānas

Yājñavalkya (I, 3) reckons them as fourteen, viz., the four Vedas, the six $Ved\bar{a}ngas$, and $Pur\bar{a}na$, $Ny\bar{a}ya$, $M\bar{\imath}m\bar{a}ms\bar{a}$ and $Dharmas\bar{\imath}astra$. The $Visnupur\bar{a}na$ (as cited by Aparārka) adds four to the dharma-vidyāh, viz., $\bar{A}yurveda$, Dhanurveda, $G\bar{a}ndharvaveda$, and $Arthas\bar{\imath}astra$. Aparārka holds that these fourteen or eighteen constitute the sources of $vidy\bar{a}$ (knowledge) and not of dharma. The distinction which he makes between the two is illogical, for, knowledge and dharma are equated. The $V\bar{\imath}ramitrodaya$ has sections named $Cikits\bar{a}$ -prakās \imath a, $Jyotisaprak\bar{a}s\imath$ a and Laksana-prakās \imath a (the last has been printed) and the $Todar\bar{\imath}nanda$ has a Jyautisa-saukhya.

46

27. THE KRTYA-KALPATARU

I have summarised the relevant information about this great digest, in two papers on Lakṣmīdhara and the Kṛtya-Kalpataru and Vijnanesvara and Lakṣmīdhara, published in the Golden Jubilee volume of the Madras Law Journal, (1941), pp. 148-168 and 199-222.

I have discovered what purport to be two of the lost books of the Kalpataru. They deal with vrata and $p\overline{u}j\overline{a}$. A fragment which relates $pr\overline{a}yasccitta$ has also been found.

28, U. 28-31. Omission of Rājadharma and Vyavahāra in Digests

The Smṛticandrikā, which Mr. Kane regards as the most complete of the earlier South Indian digests, (op. cit., p. 343) deals only with Samskāra, Āhnika, Vyavahāra, Srāddha, Āsauca, and Prāyasccitta. The Smṛti-muktāphala of Vaidyanātha Dīkṣita has sections on Varnāsrama, Āhnika, Āsauca, Srāddha, Suddhi Kāla, and Prāyasccitta. Mr. Kane (p. 671) mentions a Vyavahāra section of it, and Mr. J. R. Gharpure of Poona has personally mentioned to me that he has seen a copy of it, but it seems unknown in South India. The date c. 1600 is suggested by Mr. Kane for Vaidyanātha Dīkṣita.

48

29, ll. 2-5. Sections Omitted in the Ratnäkara by Candes'vara

They are those dealing with $pratisth\bar{a}$, $pr\bar{a}yascitta$, $s\bar{a}nti$ and moksa, for all of which he had originals in the Kalpataru, on which he has built his own nibandha.

49

29-30. THE HYPOTHESES OF MIMĀMSĀ

See S'ankararāma S'āstri's Fictions in Hindu Law Texts, passim, and Medhātithi's long comment on Manu Smrti, II, 6.

50

30-31. Consideration of Apparent Conflicts of Authorities

In resolving such apparent conflicts (the reality of such conflicts will not be accepted) a number of principles are utilised. "A Vedic basis is presumed only in those cases where an invisible effect or an effect not accountable to any visible, tangible cause is deemed to be produced. Some smṛtis are dṛṣṭārtha, that is, are intended to produce a visible result; and, some are adṛṣṭārtha, that is, are intended to produce an invisible result. The ultimate objects aimed at by the former class of smṛtis are Artha and Kāma, that is, wealth and pleasure; of the latter, are Dharma and Mokṣa, that is, virtue and salvation. Even in the case of adṛṣṭārtha smṛtis, where a particular text is obviously due to interested causes or motives like avarice, ignorance etc., it is not necessary to resume a Vedic orgin for it." (Fictions in Hindu Law Texts, p. 105). Or, the conflict may be due to incorrect exegesis or failure to reject a manifest interpolation into the smṛti from which the controverted passage is taken.

The distinction between dṛṣṭārtha and adṛṣṭārtha is also sometimes treated as a distinction between nyāyamūla and vacanamūla, and lokasiddha and vedasiddha smṛṭis.

Again, in considering contradictions arising from conflicting usage, a principle to be borne in mind is that the $ac\bar{a}ra$ of a good man $(s\bar{a}dhuh)$ is not binding if he disbelives in the Veda. This rules out Buddhist and Jaina customs unless they have independent Vedic or smrti authority. Precedents of conduct even in sruti are valid only if such conduct was clearly due to a conscious sense of rectitude, i.e., of doing a meritorious act, in the performer (op. cit., p. 138).

The Bhaviṣya-purāṇa, cited by the Vīramitrodaya (Paribh., p. 19) classifies smṛtis as under:

Dṛṣṭārthā tu smṛtih kācit adṛṣṭārthā tathāparā |
Dṛṣṭādṛiṣṭārtharūpānyā nyāyamūlā tathāparā |
Anuvādasmṛtistvanyā siṣṭair-dṛiṣṭā tu pancamī |
Sarvā etā Vedamūlā dṛiṣṭārthā parihṛtya tu ||

The Dristarthasmrti is said to deal with the following topics, according to the same $Pur\bar{a}na$:

Ṣadguṇasya prayojyasya prayogah kāryagauravāṭ l Sāmādīnām upāyānām yogo-vyāsasamāsatah || Adhyakṣāṇām ca nikṣepaḥ kanṭakānām nirūpaṇam | Dṛṣṭārthe yam smṛtiḥ proktā ṛṣibhiḥ Garuḍātmaja ||

The Arthas āstra under this classification is a dṛstūrtha smṛti, and has no Vedic source (a-vedamūla). The smṛtis with a Vedic basis are classifiable as (1) other-worldly, (2) worldly as well as other-worldy, (3) ratiocinative and (4) digests.

51

31, Il. 14-20. Alleged Rule of Kālikā-purāņa on the Adoption of a Boy who Has Had Samskāras

The adoption of a boy, who has undergone his upanayana in his father's house, is prohibited by Kamalākara, on the authority of a passage of the $K\bar{a}lik\bar{a}pur\bar{a}na$, which is thus translated by V. N. Mandlik, (Trn. of $Vyavah\bar{a}ramay\bar{u}kha$, p. 58):

"A son whose ceremonies upto tonsure have been performed with the gotra or family name of his father, does not attain the sonship of another man."

Nilakantha ($Vyavah\bar{a}ramay\bar{u}kha$, ed. Kane, p. 114) rejects the passage on the ground that in two or three copies of the $K\bar{a}lik\bar{a}$ -pur $\bar{a}na$ it is not to be seen:

Idam tu vaco na tathā visrambhaṇīyam, dvi-tri-Kālikāpurāṇa-pustakeṣu adars anāt.

52

31, II. 30-31. JUDGES AND ASSESSORS TO BE TRAINED LAWYERS

A trained Judge replaces the King in trials (Manu, VIII, 9, 11) and he judges along with three assessors ($sabhy\bar{a}h$). The same procedure is laid down by $Y\bar{a}j\bar{n}avalkya$ (II, 3):

Apas'yatā kāryavas'āt vyavahārān nṛpeṇa tu l Sabhyaiḥ saha niyoktavyo brāhmaṇaḥ sarvadharmavit ll Nārada indicates the manner in which the judge should proceed to discharge their duty:

Dharmas āstram puraskrtya prādvivākamate sthitah | Samāhitamatih pasyet vyavahārān anukramāt ||

The duties of the assessors are laid down by Manu (VIII, 10-19).

The sabhyas had to be of an odd number (three according to Kautilya and Manu and any number upto seven, so long as it was odd) for the sake of getting a decision in case of difference of opinion, as pointed out by Mitramis'ra:

Samkhyā-vaişamyam tu, bhūyo alþavi-rodhe bhūyasām syāt iti (Vīramitrodaya, p. 35).

The judge must abide by the finding of the assessors, according to Bṛhaspati (Trn. Jolly, I, 24).

53

32. Parisads

In determining doubtful points of law, the rule to follow was the opinion of those conversant with law and usage (Dharmajnasamayah pramāṇam); Manu, XII, 108, laid down that in cases in which the law was not known (anājnateṣu, accepting the text of the Kalpataru instead of 'anāmnāteṣu' in the printed editions, the law should unhesitatingly be taken to be what the cultured and holy men (siṣtah) lay down:

Anājnatesu tu dharmesu kathamsyāt iti cet-bhavet \\Yam siṣṭā brāhmaṇā brūyuḥ sa dharmas-syāt as ankitaḥ \|\

According to Jayaswal (Manu and Yājīnavalkya, p. 78) the Samiti or pariṣad was the body which settled disputed law in Vedic times. The name was kept by later ad hoc committees with reduced numbers, and they became also bodies of experts. Manu lays down that if a pariṣad cannot be constituted the opinion of even one 'excellent brāhmaṇa' will suffice.

Who are the men qualified to sit on a pariṣad? The answer is that they should be sistas (who are described as $ak\bar{a}m\bar{a}tm\bar{a}$), they should be sympathetic to all living beings ($sam\bar{a}h$ $sarvabh\bar{u}tesu$), and learned in the Vedas ($bahusrut\bar{a}h$), they should accept the validity of both Veda and perception (sruti-pratyakṣahetavah) and they should be skilled in logical inference ($\bar{u}ha-apoha-kusral\bar{a}h$), practical-minded ($desa-k\bar{a}la-vibh\bar{a}gaj\bar{n}\bar{a}h$) full of resource (yukti-mantah) and of blameless character ($sad\bar{a}car\bar{a}h$).

In constituting a pariṣad certain considerations were to be borne in mind: representation of all sākhas of the Vedas, and in cases of trial requiring special knowledge of arms etc. the inclusion of experts in such branches of knowledge. The strength of a pariṣad may be increased if it is instituted for the determination of special matters like penance (then its strength should not exceed seven), mīmūmsa (when its strength should be under twenty-one) and for grave sins (when it can go up to a hundred members). The pariṣads for kṣatriyas and vāisyas may be still larger in size. The Kṛtya-kalpataru (Brahmacāri-kāṇḍa, f. 69) limits the scope of caste pariṣads to the determination of anuloma, utkṛṣṭavarṇa-vadha, utkṛṣṭastrīgamanādi, vrata, and suddhi. This restriction of scope in pariṣads for non-Brāhamaṇas is interesting as it must reflect the practice in the eleventh century.

Sankha-Likhita, cited in Kalpataru, (ib. fol. 60) limit the scope of a $Br\bar{a}hmana\ pariṣad$ to the determination of the correctness of Vedic texts, (S'ruti-grahanam), smṛti rules, custom and usage ($\bar{a}c\bar{a}ra$) and Dharma generally. It will be seen that a $Br\bar{a}hmana-pariṣad$'s scope was much wider than that of pariṣads, for other varnas. The difference is probably due to the fact that the former were the bodies normally convened to determine rules for judicial guidance.

After the seventh century A. D., the parisad apparently ceases to function, and the Pandita (who bears the title of Vinaya-Sthiti-Sthāpaka in the Gupta inscriptions) comes into prominence as a Legal Remembrancer. Later on, heads of religious Mathas claim the right to constitute parisads or exercise themselves the functions of parisads.

54

33, line 2. Vastness of Dharmas astra Literature

An idea of its persent size may be gained by the following data. "If all the smṛtis cited in later nibandhas be taken into account, the number will be found to be about a hundred." (Kane, op. cit., p. 134). Mr. Mandlik, who made elaborate calculations of the authorities quoted by certain nibandha writers found for instance, that Kamalākara quotes in the Nirnayasindhu alone 13 works on srauta, 131 smṛtis, 68 purāṇas, and 272 bhāṣyas, nibandhas etc., making in all 484. See p. lxvi of the Introduction to his Vyavahāra-mayūkha, 1880.

55

A point to note is that the earlier nibandha writers like Lakṣmīdhara quote a relatively smaller number of smṛtis and purāṇas than writers like Hemādri and Kamalākara. Even if we allow for Lakṣmīdhara's claim that he made it his rule not to cite ordinarily more than one or two authorities when a point had to be established, the very large number of later smṛtis calls for enquiry. Mr. Kane's list of works on Dharmasāstra runs to 170 printed pages of double-columns, and his list of authors runs to 83 pages.

33. Dharmasāstra Activity in the Middle of Civil Troubles

A reading of Mr. Kane's work or of Jolly's Hindu Law and Custom will show how great was the activity during the period of internecine wars which preceded the Musalman conquest and during the Muhammadan period itself.

56

34, ll. 7-10. Idea of Union of Interest between King and Subject

This is stated forcibly by Kautilya (I, 19):

Prajāsukhe sukham rājnah prajānām ca hite hitam | Nātmapriyam hitam rājnah prajānām tu priyam hitam ||

The whole of the $R\bar{a}jadharmaparva$ of the $Mah\bar{a}bh\bar{a}rata$ is an elaboration of this dictum.

See Ancient Indian Polity, pp. 85-87.

34, Il. 12. KING AND DANDA DIVINELY CREATED

The creation of the King by the Supreme Being is found in the stories of the Social Contract in the Mahābhārata (S'āntiparava ch. 67-68). See also, Manusmṛti, VII, 3, Kauṭilīya, I, 13 and Sukranīti, I 125-140.

See Ancient Indian Polity, pp. 39, 80, 81.

58

34, ll. 14-16. HORROR OF ANARCHY
 See Arājata.
 See ib., pp. 49, and 82-83.

59

34, U. 19-24 Influence of Good Government on the Seasons

Vide ib. 108. Somadevasūri puts the point pithily:

Nyāyatah parīpālake rājīti prajānām kāmadughā dis'ah l

60

34, Il. 24-25 Rājā Kālasya Kāraņam

The dictum that the king is the cause of the complexion of his age is a picturesque way of saying that on the king rests the responsibility for good and bad government, through which, according to ancient Indian belief, the complexion (or, as we would say the atmosphere) of the yuga in which he lives will be changed for better or worse. It occurs in a long passage expounding regal responsibility in the Sāntiparva of the Mahābhārata, where it may be studied in its context. (ch. 69, vv. 74-105). The responsibility consists in duly enforcing the law, i.e. Danḍanīti. A careless, idle, indifferent or unjust king will not observe the rules of the science of government. Then he will incur the odium for not only going himself wrong but ruining the people. The passage may be rendered thus:

"Dandanīti compels men to observe the duties of the castes and orders. Duly observed, it makes people act virtuously. If the four varnas attend to their appointed duties, and wholesome barriers are maintained, then peace and contentment flow from the due enforcement of law, people are freed from fear, the dvijas attend to their prescribed social duties, and the people are truly happy. Whether (this result having been produced) it is the king who makes the age, or the age it is which makes the king (i.e. do what he does) admits of no doubt; for, it is the king who makes the age. $(R\bar{a}ja)$ $k\bar{a}lasva$ $k\bar{a}ranam$). The first yuga (thus) i.e. the Golden Age, comes into being when a king governs in strict accord with Danda-Righteousness is the feature of the Krtavuga (the first Age); there is no wrong-doing in it. The men of all the four orders (cāturvarna) find no satisfaction in unrighteousness. Every one gets what he desires and keeps it (in such an epoch). The Vedic rites are productive (then) of spiritual merit (punya). The seasons are joyous, and free from evil . . . Diseases disappear. live long. Wives are not widowed. Misers disappear. earth yields in abundance even without being tilled . . . Nothing but virtue exists. These are the marks, Yudhisthira, of the Krtayuga. When a king relies only on discharging three parts of his duties (according to Dandanīti), the epoch becomes like Tretāyuga. . . The earth (then) yields crops only when tilled. king neglects half his duties of government, an age like the Dvaparayuga sets in. The tilled earth now yields but half of what it could yield. When the king totally ignores the Dandantti and governs oppressively, then the Kaliyuga sets in. During this epoch vice is rampant, and virtue is disappears. Men fall away from their appointed duties. S'udras live by mendicancy and Brāhmnas by service (reversing their appointed modes of life).

People fail to get what they aim to secure, and what they obtain they are unable to keep. The intermixture of castes by marriage (varnasamkara) becomes common. The performance of Vedic rites is ineffective. The seasons are fraught with evil. Disease thrives, and men die prematurely. The clouds do not rain, and the crops wither. The earth dries up when the king does not observe the rules of the Dandanīti. The king is (thus) the maker of the Kṛtayuga (in his own life-time), of the Tretayuga and of the Dvāparayuga; he also causes the Kaliyuga, and . . incurs great sin. Sinking in the sins of his subjects he becomes infamous and plunges into Hell."

It will be seen that the aim of the passage is to impress on kings the duty and the wisdom of ruling according to the $s \bar{a} s t r a s$. There is nothing in it to suggest that the king has special powers to act contrary to established law and usage.

Sukranīti (IV, i, 11. 90—125) paraphrases, as is its practice, the chapter of the $Mah\bar{a}bh\bar{a}rata$ in which the dictum ' $R\bar{a}j\bar{a}$ $K\bar{a}lasya$ $K\bar{a}ranam$ ' occurs. It puts the matter pithily:

Yugapravartako rājā dharmādharma-prasikṣaṇāt \\
Yugānām na prajānām na doṣah kintu nṛpasya hi \|
Supuṇyo yatra nṛpatiḥ dharmiṣṭāḥ tatra hi prajāḥ \|
Mahāpāpī yatra rājā tatrādharmaparo janaḥ \|

Mr. B. K. Sarkar, who translated the expression yugapravartako $R\bar{a}j\bar{a}$ as "the King is the maker of the Age" (possibly to bring it into line with the $Mah\bar{a}bh\bar{a}rata$ expression), added a pointed warning: "This is the exact opposite of the dictum 'the Kingcan do no wrong." To rule in strict accord with the $s\bar{a}stras$ was in India a personal responsibility of the King. He could do wrong and great wrong, by negligence or inattention to the $s\bar{a}stras$ in the act of governing.

By a curious anomaly this telling sentence, torn from its setting, has been wrongly interpreted and cited in defence of change in social usage initiated the state. The drift of the injunction is conservative, and will not justify a reformist interpretation.

34, ll. 25-26 Rāmarājya

See the picture of the return of the Golden Age in the $R\bar{a}m\bar{a}ya\eta a$, VI, 131, sl. 97-104:

Rāghavas cāpi dharmātmā prāpya rājvam anuttamam | Īie bahuvidhair vainaih sa-suta-bhrātr-bāndhavah || Na paryadevayan-vidhavā na ca vyālakrtam bhayam l Na vyādhijam bhayam cāsīt Rūme rājvam prasjāsati || Nirdasvurabhavan loko nānartham kascit asbrsat Na ca smavrddhā bālānām preta-kārvāni kurvate || Sarvam muditamevāsīt sarvo dharmabaro bhavat! Rāmamevānupasyanto nābhyahimsan-parasparam || Āsan varsa-sahasrāni tathā putrasahasrinah Nirāmavā visokāsca Rāme rāivam prāsasati || Nityamulā nityaphalāh taravah tatra puspitāh | Kāmavarsī ca parianvah sukhas-spharsasca mārutah || Svakarmasu pravartante tustāh svaireva karmabhih Āsan prajā dharmaparā Rāme s'āsati nānrtāh || Sarve laksana-sampannāh sarve dharma-parāvanāh l Das avarsa-sahasrāni Rāmo rājyam akārayat ||

The way in which a righteous king changes his age into the Golden Age is described in $Mah\bar{a}bh\bar{a}rata$, S'āntiparva, Ch. 69, vv., 74-105.

62

34, ll. 27-30. Kārta-vīryārjuna

Kālidāsa (Raghuvams'a, VI, 39) describes Kārtavīryārjuna's miraculous power of projecting himself before an offender, when an offence was about to be committed and then restraining him from committing the offence, instead of waiting to punish him after the offence:

Akāryacintā-samakālam eva prātur-bhavan cāpadharaḥ purastāt | Antas-s'arireşu api yah prajānām pratyādides'a avinayam vinetā ||

Kārtavīryārjuna was the king of the Haihayas, with his capital at Māhiṣmatī. By propitiating Dattātreya he obtained from him these boons: a thousand arms; the extirpation of all evil desires from his kingdom; the subjugation of the world by just government; victory over enemies; and death only from the hands of a person renowned through the universe. He took Rāvaṇa a prisoner. He was killed by Paras'urāma. The Viṣnupurāṇa says of him (IV, 11):

Na nūnam Kārtavīryasya gatim yāsyanti pārthivāh | Yajnair-dānair-tapobhir-vā prasrayeņa srutena vā ||

63

32, 11. 30-32. Rāma as the Restorer of the Golden Age in Tretā-Yuga

The description $Tret\bar{a}$ -yuga-pravartita- $K\bar{a}$ rtayuga-vṛtt \bar{a} nta is applied to R \bar{a} ma by the Vaiṣṇava saint Ved \bar{a} nta Des'ika in his $Raghuv\bar{t}$ ra-gadya-stotra.

64

35, l. 2. Expulsion or Execution of an Evil Ruler

A coronation oath (pratijnā) had to be taken by the King on his abhiṣeka. If he failed to keep the pledge, he was stigmatized as an asatya-pratijnā and was held to have automatically forfeited the throne. The boast of the satrap Rudradāman (A.D. 128-150), who was a S'āka, that he was satya-pratijnā meant not that he was faithful to his international or treaty engagements, but that he truthfully adhered to the terms of his coronation oath. The killing of the last Maurya, Bṛhadratha, by Puṣyamitra, was on the ground of pratijnā-durbala (Bāṇa's Harṣacarita) (Trn., p. 193). The traditions mention the destruction of king Vena for mis-government.

The Mahābhārata (Ānus'. Parva., lxi, 32-33) specifies the kind of rulers who could be killed:

A-rakṣitāram hartāram viloptāram anāyakam |
Tam vai rāja-kalim hanyuḥ prajās-sannahya nirgḥṛṇam ||
'Aham va rakṣitā' ityuktvā yo na rakṣati bhūmipaḥ |
Sa samhatya nihantavyaḥ sveva sonmādāturaḥ ||

65

35, ll. 2-3. Taxes Are the King's Wages

This is indicated in the $Mah\bar{a}bh\bar{a}rata$ (XII, ch. 71, s'l. 10):

Baliṣaṣṭena sulkena daṇḍena athāparādhinām l S'āstrānītena lipsethā vetanena dhanāgamam ll

The King is made the servant of the people by being given his share, says S'ukra (I, 375):

Svabhāgabhṛtyā dāsaytve prajānām ca nṛpaḥ kṛtaḥ l

The same idea is attributed to the Buddhist teacher \bar{A} ryadeva, who retorted to a king, when he claimed that he was the fountain of all transactions: "What conceit is yours, King, when you are a mere servant of the gana, receiving one-sixth share as your wage?" (Cited from $Catussatīk\bar{a}k\bar{a}$ in Dr. U. N. Ghosal's $Hindu\ Political\ Theories$, p. 209).

See my Ancient Indian Economic Thought, p. 114 and p. 189.

66

35, 1. 4. King's Freedom ends with Coronation

The King had to take with deep faith the coronation oath, which is described thus by the $Mah\bar{a}bh\bar{a}rata$ (S'āntiparva, lviii, 115-116, Kumbakonam ed.):

Pratijāāmca abhirohasva, manasā, karmanā, girā !
"Pālayisyāmi aham bhaumam, Brahma," ityevacāsakṛt ||
Yascātra Dharmo nītyukto, dandanīti-vyapāsrayah !
Tam as ankah karisyāmi, sva-vas o na kadācana" ||
(cf. Jayaswal, Hindu Polity, II, p. 45).

35, ll. 15-16. VIṢŅU RESIDES IN SUBJECT AS IN KING Caṇdes'vara (Rajanītiratnākara p. 74.) cites this text:

"Adyārabhya na me rājyam, rājāyam rakṣatu prajāḥ" lti sarvam prajā-viṣṇum sākṣiṇam srāvayen-muhuḥ ||

The last line is added to the verse from the $Mah\bar{a}bh\bar{a}rata$, as it perhaps occurred in Candes'vara's copy of the epic.

The dictum "Nāviṣṇuh pṛthvī-patih," i.e. there is no king who is not "Viṣṇu" is well-known.

68

35, ll. 16-18. The King's Duty to Know Dharma

This is laid down in the following precept for which paraphrases occur in the smrtis:

Dharmādharmau vijānan hi s'āsate abhiratas-satām | Prajām rakṣet nṛpas-sādhuḥ hanyācca paripanthinaḥ ||

69

35, l. 20. Unhappiness is Due to Error in Government

The classical example is that given in the Uttarakanda of the Rāmāyana, ch. 73 and 76. A Brāhmana brought his dead son, who was hardly more than a boy, to the palace of Rāma and complained that the death was due to the fault of the king. Rama admitted responsibility, convened a parisad of sages to consider the cause of the misfortune, and was informed by Nārada that it was owing to a swidra performing austerities. Having preserved the corpse of the boy in oil, Rama proceeded to search for the sudra whom he found The ascetic reveals himself as a svudra named in the south. S'ambhūka, who performed the austerities to attain the status of a god. Rāma decapiated him, and prayed for the restoration of the life of the dead child, who promptly revived. Kālidāsa (Raghuvamsa, XV, 42-57) retails the incident and adds that the S'ambhūka (so spelt here) obtained Heaven, since he had undergone punishment at the hands of the King for his transgression:

Kṛtadaṇḍaḥ svyam rājītā lebhe sūdraḥ satām gatim !

Bhavabhūti, who introduces the incident in the second act of Uttararāmācarita, makes Rāma raise S'ambhūka to the Vairāja heaven for his tapas, even though it was against Dharma for him to have performed it.

The relevant verses in the Rāmāyana are:

Rājadoṣair vipadyante prajā hyavidhipālitāḥ |
Asad-vṛtte hi nṛpatau akāle mṛiyate janaḥ ||
Yadvā pureṣvayuktāni janā janapadeṣu ca |
Kurvate naca rakṣāsti tadā Kālakṛtam bhayam ||
Suvyaktam rājadoṣo hi bhaviṣyati na samsayaḥ |
Pure jānapade cāpi tathā bālavadho hyayam ||

(ch. 73, 16-19)

Yo hyadharmamakāryam vā viṣaye pārthivasya tu |
Karoti cāsrīmūlam tat pure vā durmatir-narah ||
Kṣipram ca narakam yāti sa ca rājā na samsayah |
(ch. 74, 28-29)

70

36, l. 1. Adjustment of Dharma to Capacity

This is the fundamental reason for having different dharmas or rules for the same acts when done by women and non-dvijas, or by the young and the very old, by the diseased, or by persons in special situations (e.g. soldiers in camp, kings on the battle-field persons attending festivals, funerals, marriages, times of desaviplava or revolution) or by persons in this yuga as compared with those in former yugas.

71

36, U. 10-12. Adjustment of Law to Changing Society

The locus classicus on the subject is the following passage in Sir Henry Maine's Ancient Law (ed. Pollock, p. 29):

"A general proposition of some value may be advanced with respect to the agencies by which Law is brought into harmony with society. These instrumentalities seem to me to be three in number, Legal Fictions, Equity and Legislation. Their historical order is that in which I have placed them. Sometimes, two of them will be seen operating together, and there are legal systems which have escaped the influence of one or other of them. But I know of no instance in which the order of their appearance has been changed or inverted."

72

.36, ll. 12-18. Absence of the Influence of Legal Fictions in Hindu Dharma

My statement is in flat opposition to the basic idea of Mr. C. S'ankararāma S'āstri's scholarly work, Fictions in the Development of Hindu Law Texts, 1926. He has brought to his task knowledge of modern law, and familiarity with the technique and literature of Mīmāmsa. But he has succumbed to the influence of analogy, and finding that the nyāvas of Mīmāmsa (which Col. G. A. Jacob would translate as 'popular maxims') have helped the development of interpretation, he has taken them to be fictions. The assumption conceals two errors: the error of attributing to the Hindu thinkers and smartas, who handled the nyayas, an attitude of tepid belief or scepticism, which we now entertain and they could not have had, and secondly, the mistake of overlooking the element of disbelief in the reality of the assumptions underlying 'legal fictions' which constitutes the real test of "fiction.' Maine's generalisation was based on his experience of European jurisprudence. There is no need to force the sense of non-European jural ideas to bring them within his generalisation. This is the temptation to which Mr. S'ankararāma S'āstri has yielded. The value of his work, as a helpful introduction to the Mīmāmsa way of approach to Hindu law, is not diminished sensibly by the wrong assumption with which he starts, and which gives the title to his book. Fictio in Roman law was a term of pleading and "signified a false averment on the part of the plaintiff which the defendant was not allowed to traverse; such for example as that the plaintiff was a Roman citizen, when in truth he was a foreigner. The object of the fictions was, of course, to give jurisdiction, and they therefore strongly resembled the allegations in the writs of the English Queen's Bench and Exchequer, by which those courts used to usurp the jurisdiction of Common Pleas: the allegation that the defendant was in the custody of the King's Marshal, or that the plaintiff was the King's debtor, and could not pay his debt by reason of the defendant's default. But I now employ the term Legal Fiction to signify any assumption which conceals, or affects to conceal, the fact that a rule of law has undergone alteration, its letter remaining unchanged, its operation being modified. . . . The fact is that the law has been changed; the fiction is that it remains what it always was." (Ancient Law, pp. 30-31.)

Adoption is named as an example of fiction in Roman law. In Hindu law the belief in the adopted son being a real son, after adoption, is as vivid as the belief in the change which the Roman Church believes to have taken place in the Sacrament, which is visible only to the eye of faith.

The pursuit to its logical ends of the idea of the transformation of the dattaka (adoptee) into a real son in Hindu law will not have been possible if there had ever lurked, as it is bound to do in fictions, a disbelief in the effectiveness of the transformation brought about by the datta-homa. The doctrine of spiritual benefit, against which Maine has many a fling, was implicitly believed in by those who applied it, and who were affected by it. To construe it as a fiction imposed by designing $Br\bar{a}haman$ is not only injustice to them but is a misreading of history.

73

36, ll. 24-28. Conservatism not Characteristic of Earlier, and Liberal Views of later Smārtas

A telling instance is afforded in $M\bar{\imath}m\bar{a}msa$ literature, which shows the modernism of S'abarasvāmin, the $bh\bar{a}syak\bar{a}ra$, and another in $bh\bar{a}syas$ of $Dharmas\bar{\imath}stra$ by Medhātithi. The 'modernism' of S'abara is corrected by the much later Kumārila, Pārthasārathi Misra and Mādhava. The attitude revealed in smārta writings on such topics as women's property, niyoga, and sahamarana, as well as melccha-prāyascitta illustrate the dictum. Conservatism and liberalism are qualities of the mind which are not necessarily responsive absolutely to environment or the time-spirit.

74

37, 11. 2-7. SCHOOLS OF DHARMAS'ĀSTRA

Unity of thought constitues the bond uniting writers, who may be classed for convenience into "schools", particularly if they can be seen as exercising reciprocal influence. Ordinarily such groups form around a teacher of eminence, whose influence is transmitted by his disciples, and their disciples, in uninterrupted succession. The existence of such groups in Arthasastra is well-known, as seventeen of them are alluded to in the Kautiliva, schools of rhetoric and grammar are also known, and of course of philosophy. hypothesis of the dependence of smrti on sruti and the doctrine of ekavākyatvam, helped the attempts to fuse opinion and overcome discord. When in such matters as srāddha, Mitramis'ra or Kamalākara criticises the views of the Maithilas, or the Gaudas, he merely implies that the views so classed enshrine wrong interpretations of rules. The arbitrary division of Hindu Law into schools is an achievement of modern lawyers. It has emphasised and stabilized differences of opinion, which were originally personal, by giving them a regional base, in spite of the fact that outside the field of customs, geography had nothing to do with opinion. followers of Jimutavahana it is self-evident that the only views that should properly be enforced all over India are his, just as to the followers of other writers, like Vijnanes'vara, the opinions of their own sages must have equally wide pre-eminence. Common ancestry, physical or spiritual, need not create homogeneity in creed. This is shown by Kautilya's marked opposition to the views of his own teacher, by differences in rules or sutras belonging to a common $s'\bar{a}kh\bar{a}$ or Vedic branch, and by divergent views expressed by cousins like Nilakantha and Kamalākara, who had also a common spiritual ancestry, even on such topics of every-day applicability as the adoption of grown-up persons.

75

38, \it{ll} . 10-11. Kauţilya and Manu on the Authority of Nyāya

Kautilya states thus his position in a passage on the conflict of laws. (III, 1):

Samsthayā Dharmas āstreņa Sāstram vā Vyāvahārikam l Yasminnarthe virudhyeta dharmenārtham vinirnayet ll Sāstram vipratipadyeta dharman-nyāyena kenacit l Nyayāstatra pramāṇam syāt tatra pāṭho hi nasyati ll

In a sloka preceding those cited above, Kauṭilya declares that the king conquers the earth to the limits of the four quarters who follows Dharma, $Vyavah\bar{a}ra$, $Samsth\bar{a}$ and $Ny\bar{a}y\bar{a}$:

Anus āsāddhi dharmeṇa vyavahāreṇa samsthayā | Nyāyena ca caturthena caturantām mahīm jayet ||

Manu was contemptuous of those who showed disrespect towards the source of Dharma in Veda, and applied mere reason to determine it, and ordained that they should be excommunicated as atheists and revilers of the Veda (II, 10):

Yo avamanyeta te mūle hetus āstrās rayāt dvijaḥ | Sa sādhubhir bahiṣkāryo nāstiko vedanindakaḥ ||

Yājñavalkya, though he held that Dharmasāstra was superior to Arthasāstra, admitted the superiority of the smṛti, which was upheld by nyāya over that which was supported by vyavahāra (rule of procedure):

Smṛtyorvirodhe nyāyastu balavān vyavahārataḥ |
Arthas āstrāttu balavad-dharmas āstram iti sthitiḥ ||
(II, 21)

Nārada (p. 17) admitted the force of $ny\bar{a}ya$ in deciding on the validity of conflicting Dharma texts:

Dharmas āstravirodhe tu yukti-yukto vidhih smṛtah.

Brhaspati went further (ed. Rangaswami, I, 111):

Kevalam s\astram\astritya na kartavyo vic\aran\alpha \big| Yuktih\ailmavic\are hi dharmah\ainh praj\ayate \big|

In cases of conflict between two opposed Dharma text, Manu (II, 14) simply followed the old practice upheld by Gautama (I, 3-6):

Dṛṣṭo dharmavyatikramaḥ | Sāhasam ca mahatām | Na tu dṛṣṭārthe avaradaurbalyāt tulyabalavirodhe vikalþah |

76

38, 11. 13-14. CUSTOMARY LAW SYSTEMATISED, RECORDED AND APPLIED

The following passages of the Kautiliya will show how it was to be done:

(1) In preparing a 'Domesday-survey' the laws and customs have to be digested and recorded in a book:

Desa-grāma-jāti-kula-sanghātānām dharma-vyavahāra-caritra-samsthānām ... nibandhapustakastham kārayet. (p. 62)

- (2) The King should promulgate the recorded customs (p. 63): pracārayaritrasamsthānām ca nibandhena prayaccet.
- (3) In a conquered country, for the purpose of pacification, he should establish its old laws and customs, (p. 408):

Caritram akrtam dharmyam krtamcānyaih pravartayet | Pravartayenna cādharmyam krtam cānyair-nivartayet ||

38, U. 19-21. RECOMMENDATION OF FAITH IN GOD IN PREFERENCE TO SACRIFICES, ETC.

Bhakti literature is full of citations in support of this prescription. For example, there are the injunctions of the Bhagavad-gita, which are merely illustrative:

Puruṣaḥ sa paraḥ Pārtha bhaktyā labhyastvanyayā l Yasyāntasthāni bhūtāni yena sarvamidam tatam ll (VIII, 22)

Yānti devavratā devān pitīn yānti pitrvratāh |
Bhūtāni yānti bhutejyā yānti madyājinopi mām || (IX, 24)
Kṣipram bhavati dharmātmā s'asvat s'āntim nigacchati |
Kaunteya pratijānīhi na me bhaktah praṇasyati || (IX, 31)
Mām hi Pārtha vyapāsritya yepi syuh pāpayonyah |
Striyo vaisyas-tathā sūdrāstepi yānti parām gatim ||
(IX, 32)

The Bhaktiprakāsa of Vīramitrodaya cites this sıloka (p. 3-4):

Yat-karmabhir yat-tapasā jūāna-vairāgyatasca yat |

Yogena dānadharmeṇa sreyobhiritarairapi ||

Sarve mad-bhaktiyogena mad-bhakto labhateījasā ||

78

38, ll. 19-21. GIFTS (Dana) Preferred

Brhaspati (ed. Rangaswami, p. 231, s'l. 4):

Tapo dharmaḥ kṛtayuge jñānam tretāyuge smṛtam l Dvāpare adhvaraḥ proktas-tiṣye dānam dayā damah ll

The last three prescriptions may be compared to the words with which the inscription of Heliodorus at Besnagar ends:

Sanskritised they read—Trīņi amṛtapadāni nayanti svargam: damah, tyāgah, apramādah (E. J. Rapson, Ancient India, 1914, p. 157).

See the praise of gifts $(d\bar{a}napras'ams\bar{a})$ in Hemādri's $D\bar{a}na-khanda$, (ed. Benares, I, pp. 4-13).

79

38, ll. 4-5. Authoritativeness of a Smṛti due to Its own Merit

See the passage from Medhātithi in the note below.

The test of merit is harmony with Vedic injunction. Even in the case of Manusmṛti to which pre-eminent authority has been given in a famous passage of Bṛhaspati (ed. Rangaswami, p. 233, sl. 13):

Vedārtha-pratibaddhatvāt prāmānyam tu Manoh smṛtam | Manvartha-viparītā tu yā smrtih sā na s'asyate ||

the grounds of its superiority are stated to be its reliable reproduction of the drift of the Vedas. This point is elaborated by Medhātithi in this comment on Manusmrti, II, 6, thus:

"Now, as regards the work of Manu, what happened was that he got together pupils who had studied several Vedic texts, as also other Vedic scholars, and having heard from them the several texts, he compiled his work; and he has therefore clearly stated that Vedic texts are the sources of what he has written, and thereby established the trustworthy character of his work. Others who came after him performed the several duties relying upon Manu's own words, and did not try to trace his words to their source in the Vedas." (Dr. Gangānāth Jhā's Trn., I, p. 196).

80

38, 11. 5-8. Smrtis Endless: Recognition of a Modern Smrti (Medhātithi)

In commenting on Manusmṛti, II, 6, Medhātithi, and interpreting the word "smṛti-svīle" in the verse, says as follows: (Dr. Ganganath Jha's Trn., vol. I, pp. 204-205):

"There can be no reasonable ground for enumerating the names of smṛtis (recollectors) as Manu, Viṣnu, Yama, Angiras, and so forth. For we find that many such persons as Paithīnasi, Baudhāyana, Pracetas and the rest are recognised by the wise and learned as reliable $sm\bar{a}rtas$ (recollectors) and yet these names are not found in any of the lists (supplied by various smrtis).

"What thus the words 'smṛtis'īle ca tadvidām' mean is that when a person is found to be recognised and spoken of by all wise and learned persons as endowed with the said qualifications, and they also accept a certain work as really by that person,—the word of such a person (and of the work composed by him), even though proceeding from a human source, should be recognised as an authoritative source of the knowledge of Dharma. even at the present day, if there were a person possessed of the said qualifications, and he were to compose a work by reason of just those qualifications, then for later generations they would be accepted to be just as authoritative as the works of Manu and others. People of the present generation—who would be contemporaries of the said writer—would not derive their knowledge of Dharma from the words of such a writer, because the sources of information available to him would all be available to them also. Hence it is that until a teacher of the present day indicates the source from which he has derived a certain information, learned people do not accept his words as reliable. When, however, he has pointed out his source and his work has been accepted as authoritative, then at some future time, if the case of his work be found to be analogous to that of the smrti rules, regarding astaka and other acts (whose basis in the Veda we of the present day can not find) it would be only right to infer its authoritative character from the fact of its being accepted by the wise and the learned (which fact could not be explained except on the basis of its being duly authoritative)."

The original passage is to be found on p. 64 of Mr. J. R. Gharpure's edition of Medhātithi and on vol. I, pp. 67-68 of Dr. Jha's edn.:

Ata eva smartṛ-parigaṇanā Manur-Viṣnur-Yamo-Angirā iti nirmūlā. Tathā hi Paiṭhīnasi-Baudhāyana-Pracetaḥ-prabhṛtayah siṣtair-evamrūpāssmaryante. Na ca pari-gaṇanāyam antarbhāvitāh. Sarvathā yamaviganena sis-ṭāh smaranti vadanti vā evam vidhaiḥ guṇair-yuktam.

Tena caitat-pranītam-iti tasya vākyam satyapi pauruṣeyatve dharme pramānam syāt iti. 'Smṛtisīle ca tadvidām' ityasyārthah.

Adyatve ya evam-vidhair-guṇair-yukta īdṛṣ ena eva ca hetunā grantham upa-nibadhnīyāt sa uttartreṣām Manvādivat pramāṇī bhavet. Idanīntanānām tu yadeva tatra tasya bodhakāraṇam tadeva teṣām astīti na tad-vākyad avagatih. Idanīntano hi yāvanmūlam na darsayati tāvanna vidvām-

Idanīntano hi yāvanmulam na darsayati tavanna viavamsaḥ tadvākyam pramāṇayanti. Darsite tu mūle pramāṇīkrte granthe kālantare yadi kathancit aṣtakādi-mūlatulyatā syāt, tadā teṣām s'iṣṭa-parigrahānyathānupapatyā tan-mūlānumānam yuktam.

81

38, Il. 21-24. The Doctrine of Representation (Pratinidhitvam)

Two principles have by their liberal application helped greatly the development of Dharmas'āstra. These are technically known as Atides'a and Pratinidhitvam.

Atides'a may be described as the principle of extension of applicability by analogy or resemblance. Such extensions may be by analogy of (1) express or implied statement, vacanātides'a, (2) identity or similarity of nomenclature, nāmātides'a, (3) and indication of injunction, codanālingatātides'a.

As a general illustration of atides'a, Gadādhara mentions the application of what appears in one context to another, ekatra s'rutasyānyatra sambandhah (Vyutpatti-vāda). Vācaspatya defines atides'a:—Itaradharmasya itarasmin prayogāya ādes'ah. Madhavācārya explains the principle thus: (Jaiminīya-nyāya-māla-vistarah, VII, v, i, 1):

Prākṛtūt-karmaṇo yasmāt tat-samāneṣu karmasu l Dharmopades·o yenasyāt sotides·a iti smṛtaḥ ||

The two principles of atides a and pratinidhitvam are connected by doctrine and application.

Another familiar substitute is a fixed money payment for the baths and services, or penances (kṛcchra) prescribed for expiation.

In law, the most conspicuous example of the application of the principle is the validity of substitutes for sons of the body (aurasa-putrāh) in the son adopted (dattaka), bought (krīta) given by himself (svayam-datta) etc. A substitute when allowed is held to be identical with the original. This supposition or belief leads to the principle of identity, what is equal to the original for purposes of substitution or representation, being regarded as identical with its original. Thus came deductions of the identity of husband and wife, father and son, son and daughter, master and servant, owner and slave etc. The logical corollary to identity is common personality, and the pratinidhi principle leads to the legal concept of common personality between husband and wife and parent and son, with its implications and consequences in law.

The underlying idea in pratinidhitvam is the permissibility of the use of a substitute, in cases in which either the original cannot be secured or is rendered incompetent to officiate. The justification for the use of the subsitute is resemblance, real or apparent (Tulyarūpatayā mukhyakāryā-kāritvārthe nidhīyamānatvam iti Nyāyakosa, p. 530). Thus, in a vaidika ceremony, in the absence of a real son, an adopted son is permitted to function. Or even other representatives are allowed in similar circumstances, as ruled by the Skandapurāṇa in the following sloka;

Putram ca vinayopteam bhaginīm bhrātaram tathā l Esāmabhāva evānyam brāhmanam viniyojayet ||

Or again, in case the article enjoined for use in a vaidīka ceremony is unavailable, a substitute may be used, as indicated in Srautasūtras, e.g. Kātyāyana-srautasūtra, I, 4. Thus the use of gold (hiranya), tandula (rice) as pratinidhi (substitute) for clarified butter (ājya) in sacrifices (yajña) or dāna (gifts) is well-known. The following illustrate the pratinidhi principle in operation.

Brhaspati (ed. Rangaswami, p. 208, sl. 78):

Ājyam vinā yathā tailam sadbhih pratinidhih smṛtam lathaikādas'a putrāstu putrikaurasayorvinā||
Yadyekajātā bahavo bhrātarastu sahodarāh lekasyāpi sute jāte sarve te putriņah smṛtāh lekahvīnām ekapatnīnām eṣa eva vidhih smṛtah lekā cet putriņī tāsām sarvāsām piṇḍadastu sah.||

S'atapatha-Brāhmaṇa (Trn. Eggeling, S.B.E., XLIV, 187):

"The father is the same as the son and the son the same as the father".

Vājasaneya-Brāhamaņa (cited by Kullūka, IX, 45)

Ardho ha vā eṣa ātmanaḥ tasmād-yad-jāyām na vindate naitāvat prajāyate asravo hi tāvad bhavati atha yadaiva jāyām vindate atha prajāyate ta hi sarvo bhavati, tathā caitad-vedavido viþrā vadanti yo bhartā saiva bhāryā smṛtā.

Manusmṛti, IX, 45-46:

Etāvāneva puruṣo yajjāyātma prajeti ha \\Viprāh prāhuḥ tathā caitadyo bhartā sa smṛtānganā \|\Na niṣkraya-visargābhyām bhartur-bhāryā vimucyate \|\Evam dharmam vijānīmaḥ prāk-prajāpati-nirmitam.\|\|

Medhātithi on Manu, IX, 45:

Yasya bhāryā tasyāpatyam : yasmāt bhāryāyāḥ bhartuscaikatvam.

The enormity of a dispute between father and son is due to the principle of their identity (Manusmṛti, III, 159; Gautama, XV, 19.)

The principle is illustrated in the anonymous sloka cited by the $Mit\overline{a}ksar\overline{a}$ (II, 32):

Guroh s'işye pituh putre dampatyoh svāmibhṛtyayoh l Virodhe tu mithasteṣām vyavahāro na siddhyati ll i.e., "a suit will not lie between a preceptor and a pupil, a father and a son, between husband and wife, and between master and servant, even if they are on inimical terms." But, as the strict application of this principle will lead to injustice and leave aggrieved sons, wives and servants without legal redress, the $Mit\bar{a}k\bar{s}ar\bar{a}$ indicates the pious character of the injunction and the obligation of the king to hear complaints from such persons, if, after they are advised to compose their differences, they insist on being heard:

'Dṛṣṭādṛṣṭayoḥ sreyaskaro na bhavati gurvādibhir-vyavahāra' iti prathamam siṣyādayo nivāraṇīyāh rājñā sasabhyena iti 'guroḥ sriṣye' ityādi slokasya tātparyaḥ. Atyanta-nirbandhe tu sriṣyādīñām apyuktarītyā pravartanīyo vyavahūraḥ.

The excepted cases are those in which a father squanders property derived from the grandfather, the husband squanders the strīdhanam, and a teacher chastises a pupil more severely than allowed by law.

The principle of representation or substitution gave rise to the recognition of actions by 'near friends' on behalf of minors, women and afflicted or disabled persons, and of agents (nivuktāh), who were heard, as if they were principals, but with the distinct understanding that, just as in religious sacrifices, the spiritual merit accrues not to the officiating priest but to the person on whose behalf he performs the ceremony, so in the case of suits, success and failure go to the principals and not to the agents. Parents, brothers and sons could plead or act in suits, even without specific authorisation, which was required only for strangers. The interposition of unauthorised persons, claiming to act as agents, is punishable except in the above cases of near kin: vide Brhaspati-smrti (ed. Rangaswami), I, 137-138; Kātyāyana, (ed. Kane), v. 91, and Brhaspati, I. 171-2. The right of representation is denied in cases of serious crime, when the accused should plead in person: e.g. Kātyāyana, vv. 93-95. See Jimutavāhana's Vyavahāramātrkā, ed. Ashustosh Mookerii, pp. 287-288, and Varadarāja's Vyavahāranirnaya, ed. Rangaswami, pp. 33-35.

The niyogakrt is the parent of the later mukhtyār and vakīl.

82

39, \it{ll} . 9-10. Condemnation of $S'\bar{u}$ dra Mendicancy and Celibacy

See Ancient Indian Polity, pp. 40-41.

The rule of Kautilya imposing a severe punishment on those who become ascetics without providing for their wives and children, or who cause women to enter the ascetic order, is manifestly aimed against S'ūdras, who, under the influence of Buddhism, were entering the monastic order:

Putradāramapratividhāya pravrajatah pūrvasāhasadandah; striyam ca pravrājayatah . . . Vānaprasthādanyah pravrajitabhāvah . . . nāsya janapadam upaniveseta (p. 48). The ascetic was both a celibate and a mendicant.

83

39, ll. 10. Magnification of the Brāhmaṇa

Manusmṛṭi enjoins due reverence to Brāhmaṇas in IV, 39, 52, 58, 135-136, 142, 162. The king is degraded by showing them irreverence, X, 43. Dr. Jayaswal held that the composition of the present Manusmṛṭi (according to him) in the age of Puṣyamitra is responsible for several claims put forward on behalf of the Brāhmaṇa; e.g., He is Īsa in the sense of the ruler of the whole world, IX, 245; he is Īs'vara (Ruler), for the protection of Dharma, I, 99; he is lord of everything (sarvasyādhipati) VIII, 37; and he is entitled to all that exists (I, 100). See Jayaswal, Manu and Yājħavalkya, passim, and particularly, pp. 102-104.

84

39, U. 18-23. Performance of As'vamedha by Kings of Dubious Caste

See Note below on the similar references on p. 54 of the text. The Bhāras'iva Asvamedhas are referred to in the Dhammak and Siwani copper-plate inscriptions of Pravarasena II (Fleet, Gupta Inscriptions, pp. 235-249). Rudrasena I of the Vākātaka dynasty is referred to as the daughter's son of "the illustrious Bhavanāga the Mahārāja of the Bhāras'ivas . . . who were sprinkled with the pure water of the Bhāgirathī that had been obtained by their valour, and who performed ablutions after the celebration of ten As'vamedha sacrifices" (p. 241). The translation is Fleet's and has been followed by students of Indian history, and the Bhāras'iva king is credited with the performances of a record number of As'vamedha sacrifices. The exact expressions used are:

Parākramādhigata-Bhāgīrathyamalajala-mūrddhābhiṣiktānām Das'ās'vamedhā-vabhṛtasnātānām, Bhāras'ivānām, Mahārāja Bhavanāga dauhitrasya

They appear to me to mean only that Bhavanāga had a lustral bath, after the performance of an As'vamedha at the famous Das'āsvamedha ghat on the Ganges at Benares, whose sanctity is supposed to be derived from the performance there of As'vamedha sacrifices by Brahma himself. It also means that he had conquered by his prowess (parākrama) the banks of the Ganges, probably Benares.

85

39, U. 20-23. SAMUDRAGUPTA'S RELATION TO AN OUTCASTE CLAN

The mother of Samudragupta was a princess of the Licchavi clan, which, though famous in the days of the Buddha, was regarded as an outcaste clan in the Gupta epoch. Thus Manusmṛti classes them with other degraded castes of mixed origin;

Jhallo mallas ca rājanyāt vrātyal-licchivireva ca l Naṭasca karanascaiva khaso dravida eva ca l

The Manusmṛti is pre-Gupta on other evidence, and this origin ascribed to the powerful patrons of the Brahmanical revival in Magadha could not have been stated publicly during the hey-day of the Gupta empire.

86

39, Il. 23-24. Heliodorus the Vaisnava Greek

A column discovered at Besnagar near Bhilsa, in the extreme south of the Gwalior state, has the following inscription. The column must have been a flag-staff (dvajastambha) of a Viṣṇu temple and been surmounted by the figure of Garuḍa. The text of the inscription reproduced here follows the reconstruction by Prof. E. J. Rapson (Ancient India, p. 157). See also J.R.A.S., 1909, and 1910.

Devadevasa Vāsudevasa Garuḍadvaji ayam kārite ia Heliodoreṇa Bhāgavatena, Diyasa putreṇa, Takṣasilākena, Yoṇa-dūtena, āgatena Mahārājasa Antalikitasa upantā sakāsam rājīo Kāsiputrasa Bhāgabhadrasa trātārasa vasena catudaseṇna rājena vadhamānasa trīṇi amutapadani—su anuṭhitāni nayanati saga dama cāga apramāda.

TRANSLATION

This Garuda column of Vāsudeva, the god of gods, was erected here by Heliodorus, a worshipper of Viṣṇu, the son of Dion, and an inhabitant of Takṣas'ila, who came as Greek ambassador from the Great King Antialcidas to King Kās'īputra Bhāgabhadra, the Saviour, then reigning prosperously in the fourteenth year of his kingship.

Three immortal precepts . . . when practised lead to Heaven: self-restraint, charity, and conscientiousness.

87

39, U. 25-26. The Huns as Worshippers of Vișnu

On the basis of the inscriptions of Mātrviṣṇu and Dhanyaviṣṇu at Eran in Eastern Malwa, bearing the date 165 of the Gupta era, (i.e. A.D. 484-585), the late Mr. R. D. Banerji (History of India, p. 189) states that the Huns were worshippers of Viṣṇu. The brothers dedicated a Garuda-dhvaja i.e. a flag-staff surmounted by the figure of Garuda, (Inscription No 19, pp. 88-90, J. F. Fleet, Gupta Inscriptions, Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum, III). the inscription, the reigning king is referred to as Budhagupta. In a second inscription incised on the base of a colossal stone image of Visnu as Bhuvarāha (ibid., No. 36, pp. 158-161), the reigning king is referred to as Toramana, and the inscription is dated in the first year of his reign. The object of the inscription is to record the building of the temple in which the image stands by Dhanyavisnu, the brother of Mātrvisnu. Both brothers claim to have performed Vedic sacrifices, studied the scriptures, and to have been Brāhamanarsi (Svakarmābhiratasya kratu-yājinodhīta-svādhyāyasya vibrarseh.) They claim to belong to the Maitravanīva-Sākha (Maitrevāni vrsabhasya). The inscription on the flag staff ends with the pious Brahmanical benediction—svastvastu go-brāhmana-purogābhya sarva prajābhya iti.

88

40, ll. 9-10. The Effects of the Spread of Mīmāmsa on Buddhism

The assault of Pūrva-Mīmāmsa on Buddhism was direct. Kumārila indicted Buddhism as opposed to the Veda, though he admitted (in order to take away any claim to originality of thought by the Buddhist) that the Buddhist systems owed their inspiration to the Upaniṣads. The assault on addiction to objects of sensual gratification is common to all serious thought, Upaniṣadic or Buddhist. Kumārila is definitely of the opinion that the Mīmāmsasūtras of Jaimini contain criticisms of the views of Buddhists. This is his personal view, and should not weigh unduly in an estimation (as it has done) of the date of the Mīmāmsa-sūtras. He was obsessed by his dislike of Buddhism, and might attribute to the founder of his school an equal dislike, overlooking the possibility of his founder being ante-Buddha. Both Dr. A. B. Keith and Mr. P. V. Kane have affirmed the absence of any explicit reference to the Buddha or his doctrines in the sūtras. Prof. G. V. Devasthali in a recent paper (Annals of the B.O.R.I., 1940, Vol. XXII) asserts that the only mention of the word Buddha in the expression of Buddha-sāstrāt, which occurs, is not to the founder of Buddhism but is used in the sense of 'one who knows' (Mimāmsa-sūtra, I, 2, 33.) He concludes that Jaimini lived before the Buddha, and that his date can not be later than 500 B.C.

But, this does not take away the fact that the Mīmāmsa stood for the defence of the ritualism of the Veda for which the Buddhist had dislike. It "welcomes all philosophical views so long as as they do not injure its central theme, viz., the transcendent importance of Dharma interpreted in the ritualistic sense. . . . The Veda is acknowledged as authoritative and its validity is established against the Buddhists, who dispute it, and the seekers of knowledge who subordinate Karma to Jñāna. . . The Mimamsa accepts a realistic view of the world against the Buddhists." (Radhakrishnan, Indian Philosophy I, p. 375).

The Buddhist is definitely attacked in Kumārila's Slokavārtika, II, 169-172:

- "169. The falsity of the scriptures of the Buddha are proved by the fact of their being due to human agency. Their character (of falsity) could not belong to the Veda, because in its case there is no author (human agency).
- 171-2. The assertions of the Buddha etc., that were brought forward by the atheists as examples to prove the unauthenticity of the Veda, are shown here to be non-concomitant. Because it has been shown above that the effects of these (Vedic assertions) are correct."

The identification of the Buddhist and the Atheist is old. Vasistha lumps the atheist and the man who becomes an out-caste by neglecting his duties (Karmacaṇḍāla) and the latter is manifestly the Buddhist. Manu, (IX, 224-226) aims at Buddhists when he condemns "S'ūdras in the guise of Brāhmaṇas-(s'ūdrāmsca dvijalingināh), atheists (þās'aṇḍas) and persons who abjure duty (vikarmasthāh). Manu girds at Buddhists again in

XII, 95, where they are characterised (correctly) as $Veda-b\bar{a}hy\bar{a}h$. The $Visnupur\bar{a}na$ lumps the village-mendicant (monk) and the Jaina ascetic (Nirgrantho) as full of sins (bahudoso), and the allusion is to the Buddhist. The much later Ṣaṭ-trimsanmata (post-Kumārila) is even more condemnatory and rules that the contaminating touch of the Buddhist can be removed only by a bath with clothes on (p. 174):

Buddhān pās upatān jainān lokāyatika-kāpilān | Vikarmasthān dvijān sprstvā sacelo jalamāvis et. ||

The restoration of the old Karma-mārga, which was the aim of Kumārila and his group, meant naturally hostility to Buddhism. The fantastic stories of a persecution of Buddhists organized under a (mythical) king by Kumārila are the creations of the putrid imagination of later hagiologists, who treated of the life of Sankara. See Note lower down on the animus against the learned S'ūdra.

89

40, II. 10-11. S'ankara's Influence in the Disappearance of Buddhism

See Radhakrishnan, Indian Philosophy, II, pp. 470-473, and 496-497. Sir S. Radhakrishnan points out that "it is said, not without truth, that Brahmanism killed Buddhism by a fraternal embrace. We have seen already how Brahmanism silently assimilated many Buddhist practices, condemned animal sacrifices, accepted Buddha as an avatar of Viṣṇu, and thus absorbed the best elements of the Buddhist faith. Though the accidents of its first immediate form disappeared, Buddhism became, partly through Samkara's influence, a vital force in the life of the country. Buddhism created in the region of thought a certain atmosphere from which no mind could escape, and it undoubtedly exercised a farreaching influence on Samkara's mind. An Indian tradition opposed of Samkara holds that he is a Buddhist in disguise and his māyā-vāda but crypto-Buddhism. . . . Yāmunācārya, the spiritual grand-father of Rāmānuja is of the same opinion which Rāmānuja repeats. Vijnanabhiksu, commenting on the Samkhya system. observes: "There is not a single Brahmasutra in which our bondage is declared to be due to mere ignorance. As to the novel theory of Māvā propounded by persons calling themselves Vedāntists. it is only a species of the subjective idealism of the Buddhists. The theory is not a tenet of the Vedanta."... These estimates imply that Samkara incorporated certain Buddhist elements such as the doctrine of mava and monasticism into the Vedanta philosophy." In a sense it may therefore be said that S'amkara stole the Buddhists' thunder. That the "borrowing" is perhaps not direct but due to both Buddhist and Advaitic thought, being directly descended from the thought of the Upanisads, does not alter the effect on the displacement of Buddhist by the neo-Brahmanical, i.e. Vedantic thought. The personal orthodoxy of S'amkara will have given point to the change. "There are similarities between the views of Buddhism and the Advaita Vedanta."

The Buddha had meanwhile been accepted as an avatar of Viṣṇu. In some traditions he takes the place of Īs'vara (i. e. S'iva) who is made to say (in the Padmapurāṇa Uttarakhanda, ch. 236) that in the form of a Brāhmaṇa (?) he had himself declared in the Kaliyuga the false doctrine of Māyāvāda. The implication of the acceptance of the Buddha as an avatar of Viṣṇu is that he re-appears as the champion of Vedic Dharma. That there is no incongruity in the legend will be manifest to those who remember that the Buddha lived and died a Hindu, and that the belief that he was opposed to the Vedas is not correct.

90

40, \it{ll} . 27-28. Devala's Claim to Supersede Other Smṛtis

He ends his allocution on purifactory rites for the restoration of the status of abducted women etc. with this declaration:

Prāyascittam samākyātam yathoktam Devalena tu l Itareṣām Ŗṣīnām ca nānyathā vākyam arhata ||

91

41, ll. 1-16. DIGESTS UNDER ROYAL AUTHORSHIP OR PATRONAGE

King Bhoja of Dhāra (Dhāres'vara Bhojadeva, first half of the eleventh century A. D.) wrote many works among which the best known to smārtas is his Bhūpāla-kṛtya-samuccaya, a digest on Dharms'āstra from which citations occur in later nibandhas. The Mitākṣarā cites his views, but the Kalpataru makes no reference to him at all. His work is completely lost. See Mr. P. V. Kane's article on Bhojadeva in J.B.B.R.A.S., 1925, pp. 223-224.

Gopāla is now established as the author of the Kāmadhenu, another lost digest, not only by the mention of it by Candes'vara (Kane, op. cit., p. 295) but by an express declaration by Lakṣmidhara in the verses introducing the Kṛtya-kalpataru. He is spoken as a "friend" (vayasya) of Lakṣmidhara and probably belonged to the same court. For Vijñānes'vara, Aparārka and Lakṣmidhara, see my papers in the Madras Law Journal Golden Jubilee Volume (1941) on Lakṣmidhara and the Kṛtyakalpataru and the Kṛtyakalpataru and Vijñānes'vara passim.

The patron of Hemādri was Mahādeva, the Yādava king of Devagiri.

92

41, ll. 14 ff. Dharmas'āstra in the Musalman Period

Kullūka, the commentator on Manusmṛti lived in Benares about A.D. 1250 (according to Mr. Kane, op. cit., p. 363), while it was in the area under the Delhi Sultanate. Caṇḍes'vara (c. A.D. 1300) was minister to a feudatory of the Sultan of Delhi. S'ridatta, author of the Ācārādars'a, wrote in Mithila a little before Caṇḍes'vara. (Kane, p. 365). Harinātha, author of Smṛtisāra, a digest, which has not yet been printed, wrote in Mithila (?) a little after Caṇḍes'vara. Vis'ves'vara Bhaṭṭa, the author of the Subodhinī and the real author of the digest Madanapārijāta, was probably a Telugu Brāhamaṇa, judging from his father's name Pedibhatṭa, who wrote in the court of Madanapāla the chief of Kāsthā, a little to the north of Delhi, in the days of Sultan Firuz Shah of the Tughlakh dynasty. Madanasimha, the author of the Madanaratna, another unprinted digest, wrote from near Delhi early in the fifteenth century. S'ulapani and Raghunandana in Bengal wrote when it was under the Muhammadans. So did Vācaspati Mis'ra (author of the famous digest, Cintamani), who wrote when the area in which he lived was under the sphere of the influence of the Sultans of Jaunpur. Dalapati, the author of the digest Nrsimhaprasāda wrote under the patronage of a Sultan of Ahmadnagar (c. 1500). The Bhatta family of Benares (which produced many writers on Dharmas āstra, like Nārāyana Bhatta, the author of Tristhalīsetu and Prayogaratna, Kamalākara, Nilakantha and Gāgābhatta) wrote at Benares in the heyday of Mughal rule. did the not less famous family of the Kās'i Dharmādhikārins, to which Nandapandita belonged. Mitramisra wrote in the reign of Jahangir and Todarmal in that of Akbar. Anantadeva, the author of the Smrti-kaustubha wrote in the reign of Aurangzebe. So did the famous Nāgoji Bhatta under the aegis of a small chieftain near Allahabad, in the last days of Aurangzebe. In the illustrations the names of those who wrote under independent Hindu kingdoms in the Musalman period are not reckoned.

93

42, ll. 7-10. DVAITA-NIRŅAYA

Dvaita-nirnaya is a special form of composition. It came into vogue in the fifteenth century. The aim of the writers of this type of Smārta work was to settle, after canvassing apparently opposed authorities, controverted topics in law or usage. It necessitates a mastery of Dharmasāstra and Mīmāmsa. Works on it could be in prose or verse. The best known of these are the Dvaitanirnaya of Vācaspati Mis'ra (c. 1450), Dvaitaviveka of Vardhamāna (c. 1500), and three Dvaitanirnayas by three members of the Bhatta family of Benares, S'ankara and his son Dāmodara, and his grandson Bhānu (c. 1580 to 1620).

94

42, II. 19-27. The Substitutes for the Parisad in Dharma-vyavasthā

In the Gupta epoch the vinaya-sthāpaka took the place of the pariṣad. In the Sukranīti, the Pandita is enjoined "to study the moral life obtaining in society in ancient and modern times which have been mentioned in the codes, which are now opposed and which go against the customs of the people, and to advise the king as to which of these are efficacious for this world and the next." He is a legal adviser. (Sukranīti II, vv. 200-203.)

95

43, Il. 26-27. MEDHĀTITHI'S REPUDIATION OF THE KING'S POWER TO MAKE A LAW IN TRANSGRESSION OF DHARMA

The opinion of Medhātithi is thus expressed in his comment

The opinion of Medhātithi is thus expressed in his comment on Manusmṛti, VIII, 13:

Tasmād-dharmam yamiṣṭeṣu sa vyavasyen-narādhipaḥ | Aniṣṭam cāpyaniṣṭeṣu tam dharmam na vicālayet ||

i. e., the dharma of the king in favour of some and against others should not be transgressed.

Medhātithi's explanation is that in the course of business and in consonance with dharma and custom the king may issue edicts which cannot be transgressed. As illustrations of such edicts or proclamations, Medhātithi gives such notifications as:

- 'today, the city should observe a holiday,'
- 'all men should attend a marriage in the minister's house,'
- 'no animals shall be slaughtered today by the soldiers,'
- 'no birds shall be caught for so many days,'
- 'for so many days dancing girls shall be entertained by the wealthy men' (dancing girls being state slaves).
- "When such decrees are issued by the beat of the drum, they should not be disobeyed. But the king has no power over the ordinances relating to religious practices or dharma, nor on the rules of castes and stages of life, because any change of them will be contrary to smṛti texts. Accordingly the text under interpretation (i. e., Manu, VII, 13) will apply in cases where the smṛti texts are not offended against."

Yatah sarva tejomayo rājā tasmāt hetoh mantri-purohiteşu kāryagatyā 'dharmam' kāryāvasthām stāstrācārāviruddhām niscitya stāpayet. Sā tādrsī rājājñā nātikramanīya. 'Adya pure sarvaih utsavah kartavyah,' Mantrigehe vivāho vartate, tatra sarvaih sannidhātavyam,' 'Pasavo nādya sainikaih hantavyā, na stakunayo bandhayitavyah,' Nartikā dhanikaih āradhaniyāh'. Evam vidho atradharmah patahaghosādinā rājñā ādistonātikramanīyā. Na tu agnihotrādi-dharma-vyavasthāyai varnasriminām rājā prabhavati, smṛtyantara-virodha-prasangāt. Avirodhe ca asmin viṣaye vacanasya arthatvāt.

96

43, 11. 28-30. King's Alleged Power to Make Laws, of His Own Authority

The topic is of great value, as the alleged existence of the power is now relied on to support social legislation. In the adjudication of cases, four kinds of rules may be relied on. These are usually taken as dharma, vyavahāra, caritra, and rājasāsanam. What is the relative force of these between themselves? They are interpreted as Smṛti law, secular law custom and edicts of the king. Secular law is sometimes identified with Arthasāstra rule. (e.g. Jayaswal, Manu and Yājāavalkya, pp. 13-16). The enumeration is identical in Kauṭilya, Yājāavalkya, and Nārada:

Dharmasca vyavahārasca caritram rājas āsanam | Vivādārthas-catuspādo....

The difference comes in the last quarter $(p\bar{a}da)$; Kautilyahas (p. 150).

NOTES 133:

Pascimaḥ pūrvabādhakaḥ (i.e. each following supersedes the preceding), while Nārada rules (I, 10):

"Uttaraḥ pūrvabādhakaḥ" (i.e. what precedes over-rides what follow)."

In a consideration of the place of the royal edict ($R\bar{a}jas\bar{a}sanam$) it would seem to be last in the list of applicable authorities, in the order of priority, according to $Dharmas\bar{a}stra$ and the first according to $Arthas\bar{a}stra$. It would be an obvious interpretation to take the former as an extreme claim of the sacerdotalist and the latter of the regalist. But, the interpretation is barred, if one realises that Kautilya, if studied with care, is not in opposition to $Dharmas\bar{a}stra$, and that, on the other hand, his rules conform to it. Sukra, who is also an $Arthas\bar{a}stra$ authority, gives the king power to declare the law, but it must be in accordance with Dharma and usage. He can not make a new law. The royal edict is merely declaratory, and not innovative. This is specially indicated by Kātyāyana (v. 38):

Nyāya-s'āstra-avirodhena des'a-dristes-tathaiva ca l Yad-dharmam stāpayet rājā nyāyyam tat rājas'āsanam l

The edict has to conform to dharma, nyāya and desācāra if it is to be operative. Yājñavalkya refers to the edict as 'dharma as declared by the king' (dharmo rājakṛtasya tat). That the Arthasāstra can not supersede Dharmasāstra in any circumstances is declared in smṛtis. Thus, Yājñavalkya declares that Dharmasāstra is more powerful (i.e., can over-ride) Arthasāstra (II, 21):

Arthas'āstrāttu balavat dharmas'āstram iti sthitiḥ l

The reference to Arthas āstrā is held by the Mitākṣarā to referonly to the Artha content of Dharmas āstra. See Ancient Indian Polity, pp. 164-170.

Kauṭilya's rule of precedence will mean, under this interpretation, that the order of preference placing edicts, usages, vyavahāra (artha) and dharma as operative in sequence, simply implies that as every one of these should be in conformity with dharmasastra, and the king is enjoined to deal with causes in conformity with Dharmasāstra (dharmasāstrānusāreṇa, Yājñavalkya, II, 1), the order which the courts will naturally follow proceeds from what is explicitly stated in an edict and discoverable custom to the smrti rules, which require skilled interpretation. The explanation will reconcile the contradiction, apparent, but not real. That Kauṭilya was fully conversant with the rules of interpretation, which were codified probably even before his time by the followers of $M\bar{\imath}m\bar{\alpha}ms\bar{\alpha}$ will be evident to his readers. Further, lower down in the same passage and context, Kauṭilya lays down that Artha should be interpreted in term of $Dharmas\bar{\alpha}stra$ (p. 150):

Samsthāya dharmas āstreņa s āstram vā vyāvahārikam l Yasmin-narthe virudhyeta dharmeņa artham vinis cayet ll

He also indicates the order of action of a successful ruler in regard to the four (p. 150):

Anu-s'āsad-dhi dharmeṇa vyavahāreṇa samsthayā | Nyāyena ca caturthena caturantām mahīm jayet ||

That rules of logic should be applied as well of intelligent, interpretation for maintaining the integrity of Dharmas āstra, and that they should not be read literally and unintelligently is laid down by Brhaspati (Vyav., II, 111):

Kevalam s'āstramās'ritya na kartavyo hi nirṇayaḥ | Yukti-hīna-vicāre tu dharma-hānih prajāyate ||

The sastram in the above sloka is obviously, from the context Dharmasastra.

THE KING IS UNDER, NOT ABOVE THE LAW

This will be clear from Manusmṛti (VII, 28) which places Daṇḍa above the king:

Dando hi sumahat-tejo durdharascākṛtātmabhih | Dharmāt-vicalitam hanti nṛpameva sa-bāndhavam ||

Kautilya, p. 226, lays down that the court can punish even the king as it would punish a subject:

Uttamāparamadhyatvam pradestā daņdakarmaņi | Rājňasca prakrtīnām ca kalpayet-antarānvitaḥ ||

In criminal cases the king himself was deemed a party as prosecutor, and in the case of state offences judgment could be given against him.

The exaltation of $Dharmas'\bar{a}stra$ as $Dandan\bar{\imath}ti$ is the purpose of chapter 69 of the $S'\bar{a}ntiparva$ of the $Mah\bar{a}bh\bar{a}rata$, where occurs the famous expression $R\bar{a}j\bar{a}$ $k\bar{a}lasya$ $k\bar{a}ranam$, which has been incorrectly apprehended and used to support a claim for a residual power in a king, on account of his personal responsibility, to change law and usage in harmony with the time-spirit. (vide Note 61 supra).

97

43, Il. 29-33. Power of the King to Change Law or Usage. The Alleged Case of As'oka

The changes which Asoka is supposed to have made are the prohibition of the slaughter of animals, including the killing of animals at Vedic sacrifices, the prohibition of burning of chaff, and castration of animals, and changes in criminal law such as pardoning criminals on certain anniversaries. These are dealt with below seriatim in succeeding Notes.

A Note above (95) which cites Medhātithi's views on the alleged power of the king to change law, shows that among the examples of permissible proclamations, which he gives, come the prohibition of the killing of animals and snaring of birds on certain days, as well as the prescription of festivities, of which examples are afforded by Asoka's edicts.

98

44, ll. 4-12. Alleged Change by the Mauryas in the Law of Theft

Dandin mentions in the Das'akumāracarita (II, 44) that the Mauryas granted this boon to merchants that if they were found to be in possession of stolen property, capital pnnishment should be excused in their case:

"Maurya-datta eşa varo vanijām, īdṛṣ'eṣu aparādheṣu nāsti asubhīh abhiyogah"

The manifest thief was punished with death (Manusmrit, IX, 269) but one who was merely found in possession of stolen property, should not be put to death. "He who is taken with the stolen goods, and the implements of burglary, may without hesitation may be caused to be slain."

Na hodena vinā cauram ghātayet dhārmiko nṛpaḥ | Sahodam sopakaraṇam, ghātayet avicārayan ||

Thus, under the old law, which is given by Manu, one who is only found with stolen property in his possession, and is obviously not the burglar, cannot be sentenced to death or summarily killed.

The so-called vara (favour) of the Mauryas is nothing more than what Manu allows under the old law. If the Mauryas had declared it by edict, as implied by Daṇḍin, it was only a case of declaring the existing law, not changing it.

Further in dealing with cases of theft, as in other cases, the Dharmasāstra asks the circumstances to be taken into account. Thus the theft of agricultural implements, of arms, and of medicines should be dealt with only after the king has taken into account the time of the offence and the use to which the stolen object was put (Manusmrti, IX, 293). Traders get in the course of business property which might have been stolen. It would be obviously against the spirit of the Dharmasāstra to punish such persons with the death penalty. The example only proves that the Mauryas merely enforced Dharmasāstra, and did not change it.

99

44, 11. 19-23. RESPITE FROM SENTENCE FOR THREE DAYS IN THE CASE OF PRISONERS SENTENCED TO DEATH

As'oka states in Pillar Edict IV: "Forasmuch as it is desirable that uniformity should exist in administration and in penal procedure, my orders extend so far, namely: 'To prisoners convicted and sentenced to death a respite of three days is granted by me.' During this interval the relatives of some atleast of the condemned men will invite them to deep meditation, hoping to save their lives, or, if that may not be so, they will present votive offerings and undergo fasts to promote the pious meditations of those about to die.

For, my desire is that the condemned, even during their imprisonment, may gain the next world, and that among the people pious practices of various kinds may grow, along with self-restraint and generous liberality." (Vincent Smith's trn. vide his Asoka, 1901, pp. 149-150).

Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar (Asoka, 2nd edn., 1932, p. 342) offers a somewhat different rendering, which is given below:

"For this is desirable—what?—uniformity of administration and uniformity of punishment. And even so far goes my order: to men who are bound with fetters, on whom sentence has been passed, and who have been condemned to death, have I granted three days as something rightfully and exclusively their own. (In that interval) (their) relatives will indeed propitiate some (of the Rajukas) in order to grant their life; and to propitiate Death, they (i.e. the convicts) will give alms and observe fasts pertaining to the next world. For my desire is that even when the time (for their living) has expired they may win the next world and that manifold pious practices, self-restraint and liberality may thus grow among the people."

100

44, 11. 21-27. ROYAL PARDON

18

Manu takes away from the King the power to annul a sentence pronounced after a due enquiry in court (IX, 233):

Tīritam cānus'istam ca yatra kvacana udbhavet |

Kṛtam tad-dharmato vidyāt na tad bhūyo nivartayet ||
Manu lays down that the guilt of the killer of a Brāhmaṇa, goes to him who eats his food, the guilt of an adulterous wife falls on her negligent husband, the sinning pupil's and sacrificer's guilt on the preceptor and teacher, and the thief's sin on the king who pardons him.

Failure to punish the manifest thief is for the king a sin. When a thief, as laid down by the law (VIII, 314) approaches the king with streaming locks and confesses his guilt, he is free from sin whether he be sentenced or let off, "but the king, if he punishes not, takes upon himself the guilt of the thief." (VIII, 317).

Even if he wishes to do so the king can not let off an old offender. (Viṣṇusmṛti, III, 93).

101

44, Il. 29. PROHIBITION OF VEDIC SACRIFICES

As'oka is usually held to have interdicted the performance of Vedic sacrifices throughout his kingdom, and thereby made a violent change in the practice and religious obligations of the Brahmanical community in his kingdom. The relevant passages in, the edicts are these: (1) "Here no animal may be slaughtered" (Rock Edict I); (2) by reason of Asoka's proclamations, the cessation of the slaughter of living creatures is growing (Rock Edict IV); (3) "Favours have been conferred by me on quadrupeds and bipeds, birds and aquatic animals, even up to the boon of life." (Pillar Edict II); (4) prohibition of the wanton destruction of certain named animals, (the eating of which is prohibited by custom) and acts of cruelty on certain named days of the month (Pillar Edict V, 26th year of his consecration as king)! (5) "The growth of Dharma (in the kingdom) has been effected by regulation of Dharma and by exhortation, and of the two regulation is of minor account . . . such as the prohibition of the slaughter of such and such animals and other regulations of the kind." (Pillar Edict VII).

Among these, the word "here" in clause 1 above is capable of interpretation as "here in the capital" or "in the Palace" (Bhandarkar, op. cit., p. 298) "'iha' has been taken by some to mean 'here, on this earth' and by others as 'here' i.e. in Pāṭaliputra. But it had rather be taken to denote his 'palace or royal establishment' because all other items mentioned in this edict are connected either with either As'oka personally or his royal household."

The belief that As'oka created a furious opposition among his Brāhmaṇa subjects by forbidding yajnas involving animal sacrifices is baseless. The cost of a yajna would have restricted the number of yajnas to be performed at any time. What the king probably did was to withdraw his patronage of sacrifices involving the slaughter of animals. It may be noted that there was no attempt at all at wholesale stoppage of the killing of animals, as is often assumed wrongly.

102

44, 11. 31-32. BRÜNAHATYĀ

Brūnahatyā or the slaying of the embryo was a heinous crime from Vedic times. (Vide Eggeling's Trn. of the Satapatha-Brāhmana, Vol. XXVI, S.B.E., p. 19, XLIII, 272, and XLIV, 341n.)

The castration of animals is punishable with a fine of 100 paṇas, according to Viṣṇusmṛti quoted in Vivādaratnāhara, p. 278. Kauṭilya imposes the highest fine for violence on those who "render animals impotent, or cause abortion by use of medicine to a female slave." (Arthasāstra, p. 198). Kauṭilya recommends a king, who has conquered a new kingdom, to conciliate the subjects by various regulations among which he specifies the prohibition of the slaughter of females and young ones among animals (yoni-bāla-vadham) as well as castration (ib. p. 407). This rule is suggestive, along with one just previous to it in the Arthasāstra, enjoining the conqueror to prohibit the slaughter of animals in certain periods and certain days, including the royal birthdays, as this is what Asoka says he in the Fifth Pillar Edict (Smith, op. cit., pp. 150-152).

103

45, ll. 5-9. As'oka's Dhamma Viewed as Brahmanical

Dr. J. F. Fleet (J.R.A.S., 1908, pp. 491-497) argues that the Dhamma of the Rock and Pillar edicts is not Buddhist but merely the traditional Rajadharma. Dr. J. M. Macphail rejects the idea that As'oka's Dhamma stands for Buddhism. (Asoka, p. 48) and holds that it merely denotes piety. Dr. Vincent Smith (Asoka, p. 60) says: "The Dharma or Law of Pietv which he preached and propagated unceasingly with amazing faith had few, if any, distinctive features. The doctrines were essentially common to all Indian religions, although one sect or denomination might lay stress on one factor in it rather than on another." On an analysis of the various allocutions he addressed his subjects, Dr. Smith finds that none of them are distinctive in the sense of not being "The Dhamma of As'oka is Hindu Dharma with Brahmanical. a difference " viz. its stressing ethical features rather than formal. Dr. R. K. Mookerji accepts the view. It is noteworthy that when As'oka lays down a 'close time' in which no animals should be killed he selects just those days, viz. the full and new moon days. the fourteenth days and the eighth days after full or new moon (astami, caturdasi, and parva) on which even Hindu meat-eaters abstain from eating animal food. (See Rock Edict V.) The animals which he forbids being killed for eating are generally those which the smrtis prohibit the eating of. Over and over again he enjoins respect for Brāhmanas and ascetics. His plea for largesses and pious pilgrimages is only the inculcation of the Hindu Dharma to make danas and to go to tirthas. Without going so far as to claim that these show that the king was a follower of the old Brahmanism, it might be maintained that policy as well as conviction made him unwilling to change the rules of the old Dharma.

104

45, II. 9-12. DHARMAVIJAYA

That As'oka's frequent references to Dharmavijaya are to be taken in the sense it has in the famous classification of Kautilya of conquests as Dharmavijaya, Lobhavijaya and Asuravijaya has been argued ably by Mr. V. R. Ramachandra Dikshitar in his Mauryan Polity, (1932, pp. 128-9, and 254-257). It is appropriate to see in the edicts of Candragupta's grandson the use of well-known expressions popularised by Candragupta's great Minister, Kautilya. The translation of Dharmavijaya as 'conquest by piety,' as contrasted with 'conquest by arms', which Dr. Hultzsch adopts (Inscriptions of Asoka, 1925, C.I.I. p. 53) is a forced interpretation, when compared with the technical sense of the word which should have been familiar to the Mauryan age. The passage in the Arthasāstra where Dharmavijaya is defined (ed. Mysore, p. 380) runs thus:

Trayo abhiyoktāro dharma-lobha-asura-vijayina iti |
Teṣāmabhyavapatyā dharmavijayī tuṣyati |
Tamabhyapadyeta pareṣāmapi bhayāt |
Bhūmi-dravya-haraṇena lobha-vijayī tuṣyati: tam arthena
abhipadhyeta |

Bhūmi-dravya-putra-dūra-prāṇa-haraṇena asuravijayī; tam

bhumi-dravyabhyam upagrhya agrahyah pratikurvita

The passage may be rendered thus:

"(A weak king threatened with invasion may have to deal with invaders of three kinds.) These are the Dharma-conqueror (Dharma-vijayī), the greedy conqueror (lobha-vijayī) and the demoniac conqueror (Asura-vijayī). Of these the Dharmavijayī will be satisfied by acceptance of suzerainty through surrender. Such a conqueror should be submitted to through fear of attack by others (as he will protect his vassal against others). The greedy invader, afraid of enemies he might make, will be easily satisfied with treasure and territory; so he should be bought off by money. The demoniac invader (Asura-vijayī) will not rest content with merely taking the kingdom, treasure, sons and wives of the conquered king. Him the weak king should keep off by surrender of territory and wealth, and remain unassailed. (Against all of them, when they have begun the invasion, one should war by offers of peace and friendship, diplomacy and treacherous action.)"

In Rock Edict XIII describing the conquest of Kalinga, As'oka expresses his passionate grief at the evils which the war entailed on innocent persons, combatants and non-combatants, including the terrible sufferings Brāhmaṇas, ascetics and house-holders, and his resolve to conquer thenceforth only through Dharmavijaya and the success he has had by the change of policy. "He is now able to spread his benign influence even in regions as distant as 600 yojanas, where dwell the Yavana king called Antiochus, the four kings called Ptolemy, Antigonus, Magas and Alexander, likewise down below, where are the Colas, the Pāndyas, as far as the Tāmbraparṇi, likewise in the home dominions among the Yavanas, Kambhojas, Nābhākas and Nabhapantis, the herditary Bhoja chiefs, the Āndhras and Paimdas—and find them all practising the Dharma which he has sought to spread, and they are filled with love to him." "That love" he continues "has been attained by me through Dharmavijaya" by sending his envoys to distant regions.

This is a clear declaration by As'oka of his preference of the method of extending his suzerainty or sphere of influence without recourse to arms as against the policy of force and violence which succeeded in Kalinga, when he conquered and annexed it early in his reign.

The Dharmavijaya is what is inculcated in Rājadharma by the Dharmas'āstras, where it is suggested that as far as possible recourse to arms should be avoided, and after victory in battle, if a battle becomes inevitable, no harassment of the conquered royal family or people should be permitted. The war itself should be conducted as a Dharma war (Dharma-yuddha); see Rājadharma-kalpataru, ed. Rangaswami, pp. 125 ff. The desire for suzerainty or extension of supremacy is justified even by resort to war by S'ankha-likhita (op. cit. p. 125) on the ground that a king, as a kṣatriya has the duty to perform the horse-sacrifice (asvamedha), which can be done only by the accumulation of immense resources and by the subordination of other kings. Manu's injunction (VII, 198-199) to obtain the end by negotiation or gifts, and never by recourse to war, because the fortunes of war are uncertain, is cited by Lakṣmī-sdhara in his treatment of the subject in Rājadharmakānda of the KALPATARU along with similar injunction. The difference between the king to whom these recommendations are made and the king in Kauṭilya is that the former is assumed to possess the strength to conquer, whereas Kauṭilya's advice is to the weak ruler who is afraid of the designs of war-like neighbours, who might, according to their disposition be one of the three classes of conquerors.

105

45, l. 11. Dharma-amātya same as Dharmādhikarī

Dealing with Rāṣṭrakūṭa administration, Dr. A. S. Altekar writes as follows in his Rāṣṭrakūṭas and their Times, 1934, p. 169:

"The place of Purohita was taken in our period by an officer whose business it was to exercise general superintendence over religion and morality. Pandita, the Minister of morality and religion in Sukranīti, seems to embody the tradition of the Dhammamahā-amātyas of As'oka, and the Samana-mahāmātas of the Andhras (Nāsik inscriptions in Epig. Ind. VIII, p. 91) and the Vinayasthitisthapakas of the Guptas. The tradition was continued in the north by the Cedis, one of whose records (Kumbhi plates of Vijayasimha. J.A.S.B., xxxi, p. 116) mentions Dharmapradhana in addition to the Maha-purohita. The office existed under the early Rastrakuta ruler Nanna-raja in A.D. 708, and the officer bore the significant title of Dharmankus'a." (Ind. Ant. xviii, p. 230). Sukranīti employs the Prādvivāka (who is the same as Dharmādhikāri) to select from Dharmas, ancient and modern, those which should be followed and bring them to the notice of the king. (II, sl. 100).

106

45, ll. 13-15. Title of Dharma Mahā-rāja in the Pallava Dynasties

From the Hirahadagalli grant (Epig. Ind., I, 5 and VI, 88) dated in the eighth year of his reign, we learn that the early Pallava king S'ivaskandavarman (c. 200 A.D.) had the title of Dharmamahārāja (R. Gopalan, History of the Pallavas of South India.

1928, p. 37). Simhavarman, II, the son of Viṣṇu-gopavarman, according to the Mangaḍūr grant (Ind. Ant., V, p. 155) had also the title of Dharmamahāraja. (c. 450 A.D.) Mahendravarman (A.D. 600-630) styles himself Mahābhūta Sa-dharmā, which is equal to Dharma-Mahārāja in the introduction to Mattavilāsaprahasana (Travancore Sanskrit Series, lv, p. 3). The name Dharmarājaratha by which the rock-cut temple at Mahabalipuram is known, and which Dr. E. Hultzsch regarded as made in the reign of the great Narasimhavaraman I, was probably so called because he was known as Dharma-rāja.

Dr. K. P. Jayaswal (History of India, p. 184) gives a fanciful interpretation of the title. He suggests that it was "a Hindu edition or rather a Hindu counter-title of the Kuṣān Daivaputra Ṣāhunuṣāhi. Instead of being a Daivaputra, the Pallava king bases his claim on his adherence to the orthodox law and orthodox civilisation, which was quite in conformity with the law of the Hindu constitution. He was substituting Dharma for the divine Daivaputra." I see no motive in the selection of the title other than that suggested in the text.

107

45, 11. 16-18. KADAMBA TITLE OF DHARMA-MAHĀRĀJA

The founder of the Kadamba dynasty, Mayūra-s'arma (A.D. 345-370), came of a Brāhmaṇa family devoted to the study of the Vedas and the performance of sacrificial rites. In the Talaguṇḍa inscription (Epigraphia Carnatica, VII, Intn., p. 9) his name appears with the Brāhmaṇa suffix s'arman. This is replaced by the Kṣatriya suffix varman, by which he is known in all subsequent records. As Brāhmaṇas the Kadambas could not have rightfully become kings. Mṛges'vara-varma, the seventh ruler of the dynasty, is styled in an inscription of his queen as Dharma-Mahārāja Mṛges'vara-varma.

Dr. Jayaswal suggests, without sufficient reason, that the Kadambas and the Gangas assumed the title, because they were under the Pallava empire. (History of India, p. 199).

108

45, Il. 18-19. GANGAS AS DHARMA-MAHĀRĀJAS

For instances see M. V. Krishna Rao, Gaiigas of Talkād, 1936, pp. 120-123. Madhava Kongani-varma (c. 430 A. D.) was known as Kongani-varma Dharma-Mahādhirāja. "In the Uttanur plates (Madras Epigraphist's Report, 1916, p. 35) Durvinīta is compared to Vaivasvata-Manu (A. D. 853-869). Nītimārga is lauded as the foremost of kings following Nītisāra. Mārasimha (A. D. 960-970) the son of Būtuga II, took the title of Dharma-avatāra: 'incarnation of Dharma' (Fleet, Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts, in the Bombay Gazetteer, I, i, p. 305)."

109

45, ll. 18-19. TITLE OF DHARMA-MAHĀRĀJA IN CAMPĀ

The Kaundinya ruler of Campā Bhadravarman (c. A. D. 400) as Dharma-Mahārāja (R. C. Majumdar, Campā, 1927, III, Ins. 2, p. 3) Dr. Jayaswal considers that the Kaundinya dynasty of Campā was founded by a scion of an old and respected dynasty from North India, which had settled in the Pallava kingdom, from which the migration apparently took place to Campā (History of India, pp. 169-170). The inscription of Bhadravarman on the Cho Dink rock is in Sanskrit prose and refers to a sacrifice performed by the king before S'iva as Bhadres'vara.

110

45, 11. 20-22. COLA CLAIM TO FOLLOW MANU'S LEAD

Rājakesari Rājamahendra, who was chosen as heir-apparent to the Cola throne in A. D. 1059, has left three records in which the opening prasasti begins thus: Manu-nīti-murai-valara, i.e., May the righteousness of Manu duly increase. The Colas claimed descent from Manu. A mythical ancestor of the Cola dynasty, named Manu Cola, is said to have sentenced his son to be killed by having a chariot driven over him, as he had killed a calf by running over it, and the bereaved cow complained to the just king. (Nīla-kaṇṭha S'āstri, Colas, I, 1936, p. 12). An inscription states that the king followed the laws of Manu and collected only one-sixth of the produce of land (ibid. p. II, p. 327). Rajendra II (acc. A. D. 1246) begins his inscriptions with the words—Manukulam-eduttu nerimudi-sūdi-aruliya i.e. He who having assumed the righteous crown of the line of Manu.

111

45, l. 21. Kālidāsa on Manu's Ideal

vide Raghuvams'a, I, 17:

Rekhāmātramapi kṣuṇṇād ā-Manor-vartmanaḥ param i.e., He (Dilīpa) did not swerve even to the extent of a line from the path of Manu.

112

45, ll. 24-29. EVILS OF ANARCHY $(Ar\bar{a}jat\bar{a})$

For the evils of interregnums, owing to the demise of kings, and of king-lessness, i. e., $ar\bar{a}j\bar{a}t\bar{a}$, see $Ram\bar{a}yana$, II, 67, where the following slokas occur:

Nārājake janapade yajītasilā dvijādayah |
Satrānyanvāsate dāntā brāhmanāh samsitavratāh || (13)
Nārājake janapade mahāyajītesu yajvanah |
Brāhmanāh vasu-sampūrnāh visrjantyāptadakṣināh || (14)
Nārājake janapade mālya-modaka dakṣināh |
Devatābhyarcanārthāya kalpyante niyatair-janaih || (27)
Nārājake janapade svakam bhavati kasyacit. |
Matsyā iva janā nityam bhakṣayantah parasparam || (31)

See 66 also Mahābhārata, S'āntiparva, LIX, (LVI, Kumbakonam ed. 2, 3, 16):

Arājākeşu rāṣṭreṣu dharmo na vyavatiṣṭate |
Parasparam ca khādanti sarvathā dhik-arājākam || (3)
Nārājakeṣu rāstreṣu havyam vahati pāvakaḥ. | (5)
Rājā cenna bhavelloke pṛthivyā daṇḍa-dhārakaḥ ||
Jale matsyānnivābhakṣyan durbalam balavattarāh | (16)

See also Kāmandaka, Nītisāra, II, 40:

Parasparāmiṣatayā jagato bhinnavartmanaḥ |
Daṇḍābhāve paridhvamsī mātsyo nyāyaḥ pravartate ||
See also Matsyapurāṇa, ch. 225, 8-9:

Yatra s'yāmo lohitākṣo Daṇḍascarati nirbhayaḥ \\
Prajāstatra na muhyanti netā cet sādhu þas'yati \|
Bālavṛddhātura·yati-dhvija-strī-vidhavā yataḥ \|
Mūtsyannyāyena bhakṣyeran yadi dandam na þātayet \|

Dr. K. P. Jayaswal, against the sense of the contexts in which these passages occur, took the term $A - R\bar{a}jat\bar{a}$ to mean a kingless constitution. (Hindu Polity, 1924, pt. i, pp. 41, 97, 98, 100, 134.)

113

46, Il. 1-8. ASPECTS OF BARBARIAN RULE IN INDIA

The Indian view of foreign rule is given in the Purāṇas, whose evidence is thus summarised by Dr. K. P. Jayaswal (History of India, A.D. 150 to 350, 1933, pp. 151-2);

"The S'ākas not only disregarded the orthodox system but they imposed a system of social tyranny. The country under them was encouraged or forced to follow their manners, ethics and religious theories: Tannāthāste janapadās tac-chīlācāra-vādinaḥ The Mleccha kings followed the general practice of their race;—exacted illegal taxes:

Prājāste bhakṣayiṣyanti mlecchā rājanya-rūpiṇaḥ l
They killed and massacred even women and children. They killed cows. They killed Brāhmaṇas, and they took away the wives and wealth of others:

Strī-bāla-go-dvijaghnās ca para-dāra-dhanā-hrtāh l

They were never crowned, i.e., legal kings according to Hindu law. They indulged in constant dynastic revolutions among themselves:

Hatvā caiva parasparam; uditodita-vams ās-tu uditāstamitāstathā "There was thus a national cry, expressed in the Purāṇa texts, practically inviting the Gupta emperors and the Hindus of the time to eradicate this lingering canker in the North-western corner—an operation which Candragupta II was obliged to perform, and which he performed successfully."

114

46, 11. 11-15. REMOVING THE TAINT OF KALI (KALI-RAJAḤ)

The expression apāsta-kalibhih occurs in the verses introducing the Krtva-Kalpataru of Laksmidhara the Minister of Govindacandra of Kanauj (A.D. 1110-1154), and reflects similar expressions in the Gāhadvāla grants.

115

46, ll. 25-29. Education of Princes

The curriculum of studies, which Kautilya and later writers prescribe for the future king, is elaborate. The 'three Rs' are to be learnt before upanayana. The Veda and philosophy, especially the systems of Sāmkhya, Yoga and Lokāvata, are to be studied along with the angas of the Veda, viz. grammar, exegetics, phonetics, metre, and ritual. Ānvīkṣikī (Logic, Ethics and Metaphysics, according to the Somadeva) was to be a special study. Apart from theoretical studies, the prince is to learn the art of administration from officers of experience as well as Economics (Vārtā) and Dandanīti. He is to become proficient in the use of arms, and in secular history, traditions, Arthasāstra and Dharmasāstra, after he attains his sixteenth year. This formidable list of subjects must keep a prince pretty fully engaged till he is called to the throne. (See my Ancient Indian Polity, 1935, pp. 38-39.)

116

47, ll. 24-25. Increasing Dependence on Customary Law Caritra or usage is recognized as a source of Dharma from early times. Āpastamba (II, 15, 1) refers to des'a-kula-dharmāh i.e., local and family custom. Gautama (XI, 13, 20-22) declares that local caste, and family usage, not opposed to Sruti, have the force of law and so have the customs of cultivators, tradesmen, herdsmen, money-lenders and artisans; and these usages have to be ascertained before a decision is arrived at. Vasistha (I, 17) cites the authority of Manu for declaring the applicability of local, caste and family customs "in the absence of revealed texts." Baudhayana, after reciting five disputed usages of the South, (I, 2, 1-4) declares that such usages are valid in the countries where they prevail (I, 2, 5-6). Kautilya directs a survey of customs in the empire, and apparently the Mauryan empire maintained such a record as the British have attempted to do in the case of the castes of the Punjab (Griffin, Tupper) and the Southern Maratha country (Steele):

Desa-grāma-kula-saṃgḥātānām dharma-vyavahāra-caritra-samsthānam

. . . Nibandha-pustakastham kārayet. (Arthas āstra, p. 62)

Manu recognises caste-usage for all the four varnas (II, 18) and local, guild and family usage (VIII, 41). The king should decide cases according to both Dharma and local usage (VIII, 3). Yājñavalkya gives precedence to local custom (I, 343) in the administration of justice. The King must punish members of clans (kula), castes, (jāti), guilds (sreni), corporations and provinces, who depart from their respective customs (I, 361). The administration of civil law should not violate smṛti rules or usage (II, 5). The usages of guilds etc., are termed samayāh (conventions), and the king should enforce them, when not opposed to true Dharma (II, 186). Dr. Jayaswal maintains that such samayas do not constitute real customary law but represent delgated legislation. (Manu and Yājñavalkya, p. 76).

Brhaspati declares emphatically the inexpediency of not maintaining the usages of localities, castes and kulas, as the people will get discontented (if they are not maintained) and the king's strength and wealth will suffer thereby. (I, 126, in my edition). Vijñānes'vara, in discussing Yājñavalkya, II, 118-119 declares that the texts on succession and partition mostly repeat what actually prevails in the country. (Lokasiddhasya anuvādakānyeva prāyeṇa asmin prakaraṇe vacanāni). Mitramis'ra (Viramitrodaya), says: "All nibandhakāras recognise that smṛtis on civil law simply embody recognised usage." (Prāyeṇa vyavāharasmṛtīnām lokasiddhārthānuvādakatvam iti sakala-nibandhṛbhih abhidhānāt.). Nīlakaṇṭha says: "the science of judicial administration is based like grammar on usage". (Trn. Kane, 1933, p. 169).

Manu lays down the rule of following family usage (IV, 178):

Yenāsya pitaro yātāh yena yātāh pitāmahāh l Tena yāyāt satām mārgam tena gacchan na niṣyate ll

'The path by which one's fathers have gone, and that by which grandfathers have gone, by following it, one moves on the path of the good, and by following it he does not sin!'

The verse may be described as a charter of conservatism.

The theoretical basis of the validity of custom, according to $Mim\bar{a}msa$, is that it derives its authority from a lost or latent smrti or sruti text. But, as one has to make two presumptions to secure recognition to usage, as against one for a smrti rule, usage is held to be inferior to explicit smrti rule.

Jaimini's aphorism (I, iii, 7) that siṣṭācāra is valid without reference to its causes is to be limited to wordly matters. (K. L. Sarkar, Mimamsa Rules of Interpretation as applied to Hindu Law Texts, 1909, p. 74 and pp. 238-239.)

117

47, 11. 25-26. EQUAL VALIDITY OF ALL TEXTS. Ekavākyatvam

Ekavākyatvam has been regarded as a conspicuous example of "legal fiction" which has been useful in the development of Dharmasāstra and Hindu law. (S'ankararāma S'āstri, op. cit., p. 170).

Absolute unanimity and concord are held to exist between all smrti texts on the same subject and all struti passages also. presumption is warranted by the fundamental assumptions of Mimāmsa that the source of all law, and of all knowledge is the Veda, and that the Veda is eternal, infallible, universal and derives its authority from itself. It does not recognise any growth in the Veda or any possibility of evolution in Veda or smrti. Homogeneity is a characteristic of the Veda. Self-consistency is its mark. The idea is signified as Ekavakvatva. The consequences of the presumptions are that consistency and harmony must be deemed to exist between one Veda and another, between one passage of s'ruti and all others, between one smrti and another, and between s'ruti and smrti, as well as between smrti and acara (custom, usage). The S'ākhāntarādhikarana section of Pūrvamīmāmasa maintains that all s'ākhās speak with one voice. Inconsistency between smrti precepts, as in the rules of marriage of Brāhmanas with women of the other three castes (Manu permitting all three, Yāiñavalkva permitting only marriage with kṣatriya and vais'ya women and later smārtas prohibiting marriage outside his own caste to the Brahmana) or the practice of nivoga, is explained away by the doctrine of limited applicability to particular epochs, or ages. The remarriage of women in the five cases sanctioned by Parasara (IV, 30), is rejected on the ground of Kalivarjya, and as simply repeating an old and defunct rule. (Mādhavācārya's commentary on I, 34). Similarly, by the application of the principle of harmony involved in this nyāya, smrti rules have to be harmonised with valid usage (samayācāra) and should be rejected if contravening them (virodhe). Many illustrations of the way in which this nvava has been applied by commentators and smartas are quoted and explained by Mr. C. S'ankararāma S'āstri (Fictions in Hindu Law, pp. 142 ff.) On the application of this principle to reconcile conflicts, the doctrine that $\bar{a}c\bar{a}ra$ or usage, which is valid, is only that of sisthas (the elect), gives rise to apparent difficulties as many wrong acts condemned by conscience or smṛti are remembered of heroic characters of the past. Are such things valid if done now? The answer is 'No', because the test of valid conduct is whether it has been pursued by its author with the consciousness of doing a thing which is meritorious. Accordingly, the moral lapses of old sages, heroes and gods, are no precedents. (Fictions in Hindu Law, p. 138).

118

47, Il. 26-27. Anonymous Texts

. The question of their admissibility is thus stated by Mitramisra (Vīramitrodaya, Paribhāṣā-prakās'a, pp. 17-18):

"In several works of authority, certain quotations occur, which are introduced merely thus; 'to this effect is the smrti' 'to this effect is the sloka'. (The authorship is indeterminate). Such quotations are authoritative in as much as they have been unequivocally accepted by great men. What is styled Ṣaṭ-trims'anmatam is not so authoritative, according to the Kalpataru, because it is accepted only by some, being rejected by others. Bur Vijñānes'-vara, Aparārka, S'ūlapāṇi and others regard its citation as authoritative. This is only proper."

Yadapi smartṛnāma anirdisya 'atra smṛtiḥ' 'atra s'lokaḥ' ityādi prāmāṇika-likhanam, tadapi avigīta-mahājana-parigṛhītatvāt pramāṇam. 'Smṛtyantareṣu' ca ityanenaiva saṃgṛhītam veditavyam. 'Sat-trimṣanmatādikam' tu kaiscideva parigṛhītatvāt apramāṇam ityuktam Kalpataruṇā. Vijñānesvara-Aparārka-Sūlapāṇi-prabhṛtibhistu pramāṇattvena parigṛhītam. Yuktam ca etat."

119

47, l. 27. JUSTICE AND GOOD CONSCIENCE

The rule of equity and good conscience is implicit in the dicta of Manu and Yājñavalkya on the "feeling of satisfaction, which the good get" (Sādhūnām ātmanastuṣtih, Manu, II, 6) and what one finds to one's liking (svasya ca priyamātmanah), (Manu, II, 12, and Yājñavalkya, I, 7). To guard against caprice being taken as equivalent to conscience, the commentators explain that the satisfaction should be that which only those who are both learned in the Vedas and righteous feel, thereby relieving each man of the privilege of deciding what he should do according to his likes and dislikes. Medhātithi points out (ed. Jha, I, pp. 68-69) that the trustworthy character of such learned and good men is the guarantee of its not being misused. "When the learned and good feel satisfied as to the righteousness of an action, it must be taken as right, because such men will never feel satisfied with anything that is wrong."

But equity and good conscience can not over-ride clear law or revealed text. This is made clear by Vis'varūpa ($Y\bar{a}j\pi a$., I, 7, vol. I, pp. 13-27) who points out that the satisfaction which one feels should not be in action which runs counter to Vedic injunction, or smrti or is due merely to fidgets. Kullūka (Manu, II, 6) lays down that "self-satisfaction" is authoritative only in regard to matters in which an option is open, following the $Mit\bar{a}k$ - $sar\bar{a}$ which rules that the rule of satisfaction applies only to cases in which there are several lawful alternatives open, one of which has to be chosen. This is also the view of the $Smrticandrik\bar{a}$ (Samskārakāṇḍa, 5).

120

47, l. 29. Insight or Intuition (Yukti)

The application of reason, or the power of inference to the resolution of difficulties in evidence is suggested in the law books e.g. Yājñavalkya, II, 212. Viṣnusmṛti recommends the application of reason (yukti) to the determination of the genuineness of documents. Vyāsa, Prajāpati and other writers advocate the use of yukti for the proper construction of documents. But the most powerful advocate of the application of yukti is Bṛhaspati. Over and over again he says (XXVI, 4, 49, 50 in Vyavāharakānḍa) that the determination should be in accordance with intelligent apprehension (yukti) as otherwise there will be disaster:

Yuktyā vibhajanīyam tat, anyathā anarthakam bhavet!
20

He illustrates the disastrous effect of the failure to apply yukti to determine whether one is a thief or not, a good man or not, by the condemnation of the sage Māṇḍavya for theft:

Cauro-acauro sādhvasādhuh jāyate vyavahāratah | Yuktim vinā vicāreņa Māṇḍavyas-coratām gataḥ || (Vyav., I, 116)

He would apply it to determine the preference in cases of conflict of laws:

Dharmas āstra-virodhe tu yukti yukto vidhiḥ smṛtaḥ (ib. IX, 8)

He denounces vigorously in a famous verse dependence on the letter] of the written law (s'āstra i.e., smṛti) without an intelligent conception of the spirit through yukti:

Kevalam s'āstram-āstritya na vaktavyo vinirņayah Yukti-hīne vicāre tu Dharma-hānih prajāyate ||

(ibid., I, 114)

"A decision should not be arrived at by solely depending on the $s \bar{\alpha} s t r a$, for, in an enquiry devoid of the application of reason (yukti), there is destruction of Dharma."

It is natural that with such powerful sanction as Bṛhaspati's, King Somes'vara should enjoin the magistrate to award sentences, not by mechanically following smṛti precept, but by the exercise of his own reason (yukti):

Pramāne niscitaivāpi divyair vāpi vicārite | Yuktyā dandam nrpah kuryāt yathā doṣānusāratah ||

Mānasollāsa, ed. Gaekwad's Oriental Series, v. 1286. This is a conspicuous illustration of the extended scope of the application of yukti by a king of the twelfth century.

121

48, l. 2. Acceptance of the Usages of Pratiloma Castes

Todarānanda and Vīramitrodaya, Vyavahāraprakās'a, (ed. Jivānanda, p. 120) cite the following verse from Kātyāyana:

Pratiloma-prasūteșu tathā durga-nivāsișu |

Viruddham niyatam prāhuḥ tam dharmam na vicālayet ||

i.e. "(The King) should not disregard the fixed rules of conduct among those who belong to the pratiloma castes and among the inhabitants of the forts (or inaccessible mountain places) even if they are opposed (to rules of smṛti.)" (Trn. Kane, Kātyāyana, 1933, p. 125.)

The rule in a slightly different form is cited by Lakṣmīdhara in Vyavahārakalpataru as from Bṛhaspati:

Pratilomaprasūtānam tathā durga-nivāsinām |
Sāstravad yatnato rakṣyā sandigdhau sādhanam tu sā ||
One of pratiloma birth was deemed so degraded that to call a person a pratilomaja was an offence (Yājñavalkya, II, 207.)

122

48, 11. 5-6. THE USAGES OF THE GOOD S'UDRA

Manu gives the sources of Dharma in the following sloka:

Vedo akhilo dharma-mūlam Smṛti-sile ca tad-vidām | Ācāras caiva sādhūnām ātmanastustireva ca ||

Buehler translates the verse thus:

"The whole Veda is the (first) source of the sacred law, next the tradition, and the virtuous conduct of those who know the Veda (further), also the customs of holy men, and (finally) self-satisfaction." (S.B.E., XXV, p. 30.)

Medhātithi construed "the practice of good men" ($s\bar{a}dh\bar{u}n\bar{a}m$ $\bar{a}c\bar{a}rah$) with "learned in the Veda" ($tad\text{-}vid\bar{a}m$), and correlated goodness and Vedic learning, confining valid usage, as a source of Dharma, to those who combined both, i.e. Brāhmaṇas. The commentators following him distinguished between $s\bar{i}la$ (conduct) of those learned in the tradition ($sm\bar{r}ti$) and usage ($\bar{a}c\bar{a}ra$) of good men ($s\bar{a}dh\bar{u}n\bar{a}m$) and held, like Sarvajña-nārāyaṇa, that the latter was inferior to the former on account of the possibility of incorrectness of the tradition on which usage was based. That the distinction was not perhaps originally intended is evident from the circumstance that Gautama, (I, 2) refers to sila (conduct) only. while Baudhāyana (I, 4) and Vasistha (I, 5) refer only to usage or practice ($\bar{a}gama$ and $\bar{a}c\bar{a}ra$). The original belief was that among those learned in the Veda and tradition (smṛti) there could be no difference between conviction and practice. But valid usage was held to be those of Brāhmanas only. Mitramis'ra (c. A.D. 1610) was the first to make a break by suggesting an alternative interpretation. In Vīramitrodava, Paribhāsā-prakās'ā, p. 9. (ed Chowkhāmba, 1896), he suggested that, as an alternative explanation of the verse of Manu cited above, the word "acarah" should be connected with "Sādhūnām," when the meaning would be that "even those not learned in the Veda are to be accepted as authorities, if they are men free from weakness and defects, and in such cases, the usage of good S'udras (Sacchudrah) becomes authoritative. Though Mitramis'ra restricted the applicability of such usage to S'udras alone, even then, the break he made was definitely important, and a concession to the altered times. The passage is important enough for full citation:

"Athavā, 'ācāras caiva sādhūnām' iti cchedah. Evam ca a-vedavidām api kṣīṇa-doṣa-puruṣāṇām ācārah pramāṇam.
Tathā ca sac-chūdrādyācārah tat-putrādīn-prati bhavati pramāṇam."

123

48, l. 10. Supersession of S'iṣtācāra by Sādhūnam-ācāra

In the earlier authorities emphasis is on Sista, explained in the Maskari-bhāṣya as "avagata-vedārthāh" (men proficient in the understanding of the meaning of the Veda) and "sva-dharmā-vasthitāh" (men rooted in the discharge of their own Dharma (Gautamasmṛti, ed. Mysore, 1917, p. 453 and p. 456). Gautama (XXVIII, 49 and 51) rules that "in cases for which no rule is given, the course should be followed of which atleast ten (Brāhmaṇas), who are well-instructed (in the Veda) i.e. siṣtāh skilled in reasoning and uncovetous, approve. . . . But on failure of them, the decision of one srotriya, who knows the Veda, and is properly instructed

(in the duties, shall be followed) in doubtful cases." (Buehler, in S.B.E., II, 1897, p. 310).

Baudhāyana (I, 4-6,) after laying down that the source of Dharma, after the Veda and Smṛti, was S'iṣṭācāra, proceeds to describe the qualities of the s'iṣṭa as "freedom from envy, and pride, the possession of grain for not more than ten days' consumption, and freedom from covetousness, hypocrisy, greed, perplexity, arrogance and anger:"

(S'iṣṭāḥkhalu vigatamatsarāḥ nirahanıkārāḥ kumbhī-dhānyāḥ alolupāḥ dambha-darpa-lobha-moha-krodha-vivarjitāḥ l

Vasistha (I, 6) defined the sista as "one whose heart is free from desire" (s'istah punah akāmātmā.) Vedic learning, ascetic unwordliness and saintliness are old qualifications of the sista, whose practice or precept was to be followed where there was no clear rule. While re-affirming the position of the sista as the declarer of Dharma in doubtful cases, Manu defines the qualifications of the sista (XII, 108-9): "If it be asked how it should be with respect to (points) of Dharma which have not been clearly stated, the answer is that what Brāhmaņas, who are also sistas, propound should clearly have force. Those Brāhmanas are deemed sistas, who, in accordance with Dharma have studied the Vedas with their appendages, and who perceive by the senses the revealed texts as reason for distinguishing right and wrong." appendages of the Vedas are stated by Medhātithi (ed. Jha, II, 1839, p. 487) to be the $Itih\bar{a}sa$ and $Pur\bar{a}na$. To these are added the Vedāngas by the Smrticandrikā (ed. Mysore, Samskāra, 1914, p. 6) and the Mimāmsa, Smrti etc. by Kullūka.

Manu's injunction (II, 6 and 12) that the $\bar{a}c\bar{a}ra$ (custom) of the good ($s\bar{a}dh\bar{u}n\bar{u}m$) or $sad\bar{a}c\bar{a}rah$ should be regarded ($Tantrav\bar{a}rtika$, p. 143) as one of the sources of Dharma must be read with the above injunction to refer doubts to $sist\bar{a}h$, and the "good men" he had in view treated as those fully qualified to be designated $sist\bar{a}h$. The equation Sistah, $S\bar{a}dhuh$ is accepted by the commentators and digest makers, like Vijnānes'vara, Kullūka and others ($Mit\bar{a}ksar\bar{a}$,

I, 7, and Manu, II, 6) but the tendency is to both limit and broaden the old concept of the authority competent to decide doubtful cases. Thus, Vis'varūpa (c. A.D. 900) (commenting on Yājnavalkya, I, 7) would limit sadācāra to religious and spiritual, as distinguished from temporal or wordly acts of the good men. On the other side, Mādhavācarya (c. 1350) gives the power of interpretation as sādhavah "to the elders of each family and tribe." (ed. Bib. Ind., p. 100), and Mitramis'ra gives a purely ethical interpretation of sādhavah by quoting the following fanciful etymology from Visnupurāna:

"Good men free from all defects are called sat, and their practice, $\bar{a}carana$, is called $sad\bar{a}c\bar{a}ra$." Mitramis'ra further brings the practice of the good $S'\bar{u}$ dra within $sad\bar{a}c\bar{a}ra$, so far the Dharma for the last varna is concerned.

The supersession is manifestly due to the impossibility of finding men with the qualifications laid down for $s'ist\bar{a}h$, and is an illustration of silent adaptation.

124

48, \mathcal{U} . 10-14. Animus against the Learned S'ūdra

As'vaghoṣa in his Vajracchedika claims that the S'ūdra Buddhists were as learned as Brāhmaṇas. The S'ūdra was excluded from Vedic but not from secular studies. Among Buddhists there was no exclusion of S'ūdras from any kind of learning, and they were eligible even for the monastic life. The Buddhist monk was identified with the learned S'ūdra and much of the animus against the former was transferred to the latter. Yājūavalkya (II, 235) lays down that he who feeds the S'ūdra ascetic at religious and s'rāddha ceremonies is liable to punishment. This is obviously aimed against hospitality to the Buddhist monk. Such bitter statements as that the S'ūdra who has learned even the alphabet should be kept at a distance reflect only the animus against the Buddhist. The Buddhist ascetic is described by Kauṭilya (Arthasiāstra, Mysore ed. 1909, p. 199) as vṛṣala-pravrajita—i.e. S'ūdra ascetic.

"Manu's hostility towards the Sūdra is primarily towards the learned Sūdra, the controversialist, claiming equality and freedom." (Jayaswal, Manu and Yājnavalkya, p. 92.)

Manu's references to "Sūdras who assume the marks of the twice-born" (Sūdrāms ca dvija-linginah; IX, 224) and heretics (Pāṣandinah, IX, 225) as well as those who follow prohibited pursuits (Vikarmasthāh, IX, 225) are to Buddhists. In XII, 95 Manu alludes to them as those outside the Vedas (Vedabāhyāh). The Viṣṇupurāṇa condemns the village mendicant and Jaina ascetic (Grāma-yājaka nirgrantho bahudoṣo durāsadah). The Ṣat-trimsanmata, ed. Chowkhamba, p. 174, rules that a bath with clothes on is the prescribed purification when one touches Bauddhas, Pās'upatas, Jainas, Lokāyatas, Kāpilas, and the twice-born who follow forbidden pursuits.

125

48, Il. 17-28. LIMITS OF ARYAVARTA

Baudhāyana (I, 2, 10) lays down the limits of Aryan occupation and indicates the areas which one can visit only subject to penance:

Prāg-Adars'anāt, pratyak-Kālakavanāt, dakṣiṇena-Himavantam, udak-Pāriyātram, etat Āryāvartam. Tasmin ya ācāraḥ sa pramāṇam. Gaṅgā-Yamunayor-antaram ityeke.

Athātra Bhāllavino gāthām udāharanti:

Pasvat-sindhur-visaranī Sūryasyodayanam puraḥ |
Yāvat Krṣṇo vidhāvati tāvaddhi brahmavarcasam || Iti:
Avantayo-Aṅga-Magadhāḥ Surāṣtrā Dakṣiṇāpathāḥ |
Upāvṛt Sindhu-Sauvīrā ete saṃkīrṇa-yonayaḥ-||
Ārattān Kāraskarān Puṇḍrān Sauvīrān Vaṅgān Kaliṅgān

Prānūnān iti ca gatvā punas-stomena-yajeta-sarvapṛṣṭhayā vā.

Athāpyudāharanti:

Padbhyām sa kurute pāpam yaḥ Kalingān prapadyate Rṣayo niṣkṛtim tasya prāhur-Vaisvānarām haviḥ. ||

(I, 2, 16.)

It will be seen that the areas which Baudhāyana excludes from $\overline{A}ry\overline{a}varta$ are the Punjab, Magadha, Aṅga, Vaṅga, Gujarāt, Sindh, the lands south of the Vindhyas, as well as Rajputāna and Mālwa north of the range.

S'ankha-Likhita lay down:

Prāk-Sindhu-Sauvīrāt, dakṣiṇena Himavataḥ, pascāt Kāmpilyāt, udak Pāriyātrāt, anavadyam brahmavaracasam.

They thus exclude the lands of Sindh and Sauvīra (Kathiawar and Gujarat).

Paithīnasi lays down:

Ā-Himavatah, Ā-ca Kumāryāh Sindhur-Vaitaranī-nadī-Sūryasyodayanam purah yāvad-vā kṛṣṇa-mṛgo vicarati tatra Dharmah catuṣpādo bhavati

The lands described as the eastern limit include Orissa. Baudhā-yana (as quoted in Vīramitrodaya, Paribhāṣā-prakās'a, p. 58) adds that he who visits Aṅga, Vaṅga, Kaliṅga, Magadha and Sauvīra except on a pilgrimage must undergo new samskāras (punassamskāram arhati).

Manusmṛti, II, 22-23, lays down that the Aryan country runs from sea to sea, east and west, and mountain to mountain, i.e. the Himālayas and the Vindhyas, north to south. He adds that where the black antelope naturally flourishes the country must be deemed fit for sacrifices, and the lands (where it does not) as those of barbarians.

Ā-samudrāttu vai pūrvāt, ā-samudrāttu pascimāt |
Tayorevāntarm giryoh Āryāvartam vidur-budāh ||
Kṛṣṇasāras-tu carati mṛgo yatra svabhāvatah |
Sa jneyo Yajniyo deso mleccha-desastu atah-parah ||

The definition of the limits given by the Bhāllavins, a school of the Sāmaveda, is quoted with approval by Vasiṣṭha (I, 15):

Athāpi Bhāllavino Nidāne gāthām udāharanti— Pascāt-Sindhur-vidkāraṇī, Sūryasyodayanam puraḥ | Yāvat-kṛṣṇobhidhāvati tāvad-vai brahmavarcasam ||

That is to say, the western boundary of \overline{Arya} -varta is the Indus, the eastern the Suryodayana, and as to the north and south, the habitat of the black antelope.

That the lands which are free for the antelope to roam over, for barley and the kus'a grass to grow, and which are full of holy places are those which the wise will live in is stated in the $\overline{A}di-pur\bar{a}na$, as quoted by the Viramitrodaya (op. cit. p. 57):

Kṛṣṇasārair yavair darbhaih cāturvarnyāsramaistathā | Samṛddho dharma-desas-taṇ āsryeran vipascitah ||

It will be noted that the emphasis is also on the prevalence of the $varn\bar{u}srama$ -dharma in the area. This principle is stated explicitly by Visnusmrti:

Cātur-varnya-vyavasthānam yatra dese na vidyate | Tam mleccha-des'am jānīyāt Āryāvartam-athah-param ||

For other quotations see the Paribhāṣā-prakās'a of Vīramitro-daya, pp. 58-60. Dr. K. P. Jayaswal (Manu and Yājñavalkya, pp. 27-29) discusses the subject, and concludes that the extension or restriction of the area of Aryan usage coincided with the advance or retreat of Brahmanical rule in the land.

126

48, 1. 32. ĀPAD-DHARMA

In times of distress occupations not normally allowed to a varna are permitted to its members. These are summarised in Manusmṛti, IV, 81-104, with specifications of the occupations which even in distress a Brāhmaṇa should not follow. Distress is held to know no law, and a Brāhmaṇa who accepts food even from the most degraded is no more tainted 'than the sky by mud' (ib. 104). Yājñavalkya deals with the same topic in the section on expiations (III, 35-44). He too holds that afflicted by distress and eating anywhere the Brāhmaṇa incurs no sin needing subsequent expiation.

Parās'ara is even more emphatic. "During revolutions, (des'abhanga), foreign travel or exile (pravāsa), affliction (vyasana), let one save himself first, and then think of performing Dharma... When times of distress have to be tided over, one should not think of purity or proper conduct (s'aucācāra). He should subsequently perform expiation (when the pressure is past) and act according to Dharma" (VII, 41 and 43). Again, he holds that "the Brāhmaṇa who eats in the house of a S'ūdra in a time of distress is purified by his mere feeling of regret or by muttering the drupada" (XI, 21). This exemption applies only to periods of distress as the food of the S'ūdra is held to be capable of making a Brāhmaṇa lose his caste (XII, 32).

For other texts on $\overline{A}pad$ -dharma see $\overline{A}pastamba$, 20, 10-21; Gautama VIII, 1-26; Vasistha, II, 22-29; $Baudh\bar{a}yana$, II, 4, 16-21, and Visnu, II, 15 and LIV, 18-21, and the commentaries on the relevant passages of Manu and Yājñavalkya. The principle was capable of considerable extension, the only restriction being the avoidance of those occupations which were specifically named as inadmissible even in times of distress, i.e., when one could not live by following his varna occupation.

127

49, U. 1-2. VOYAGES AND VISITS TO PROHIBITED AREAS

Baudhāyana (II, I, 1-2) places sea-voyage (samudra-sam-yānam) at the head of a number of offences which cause loss of caste (patanīyāni) which are only less heinous than the inexpiable sins (mahapātakāh). But he also mentions sea-faring as one of the special customs which are allowed to the people of the north (I, i, 2, 4. Athottaratāh . . . samudrayānam iti), but he rules that if the special practices of the north or the south are put in force anywhere else, it would lead to sin (I, i, 2, 5). Manu (III, 158) forbids sea-voyages by implication by laying down that those (dvijas) who do so should be avoided, (varjanīyāh prayatnatāḥ, III, 166). Apparently the sea-trade for which he provides no fixed rates for conveyance, were to be undertaken by others.

In the Bṛhannāradīya-purāṇa (cited in Dharma-pradīpā, 1937, p. 50) it is implied that the re-admission into their varna of those who had gone on sea-voyages was allowed before the Kaliyuga, because they are stated as disallowed $(varjy\bar{a}h)$ in the Kaliyuga:

Samudra-yātrā-svīkārah kamaṇḍalu-vidhāraṇam |
Dvijānām asavarṇāsu kānyāsūpagatam tathā ||
Devarācca sutotpattih madhuparke pasorvadhaḥ |
Māmsādanam yathā srāddhe vānaprastāsramastathā ||
Dattakṣatāyāḥ kanyāyāḥ punardānam parasya ca |
Dīrgha-kālam brahmacaryam naramedhāsvamedhakau ||
Mahāprasthanagamanam gomedhasca tathā makhaḥ |
Imān dharmān Kaliyuge varjyānāhūḥ manīṣiṇaḥ. ||

128

49, ll. 6-8. RELAXATIONS OF YUGA-DHARMA

Parāsara (I, 33) lays down:

Yuge-yuge tu ye dharmāh tatra tatra ca ye dvijāh | Teṣām nindā na kartavyā yugarūpāhi te dvijāḥ. ||

This indicates that rules are to be different for the different cycles of time (yuga). The principle is that duties will be proportioned to the capacity of men in different cycles, it being held that there is a deterioration of capacity and power from the first to the fourth yuga, and in the fourth yuga itself with the lapse of time. Many rites like the sacrifice of cows and the doing of many acts by ancient sages, which now perplex us, are due to the superior potency of the people of those ages. The point is brought out by the Sloka Apatamba:

Teṣām tejo-vis·eṣena pratyavāyo na vidyate |
Tad-anvīkṣya prayuñjānah sīdatyavarako naraḥ ||
The point is brought out by Bṛhat-Parās'ara:

Yuge yuge tu ye dharmāḥ teṣu dharmeṣu ye dvijāḥ |
Te dvijā nāvamantavyā yugarūpā hi te dvijāḥ ||

A long catalogue of various practices, which are now condemned for the Kali-yuga, is given in the extracts collected on pp. 50-56 of the recently published Dharmapradīpa (Calcutta, 1937) from the Parās ara-Mādhaviya, ed. Islampurkar, I, i, pp. 128-142.

The reduction of the ancient rigor of duty to women and the men of the different castes is illustrated by Parās'ara's chapters on purification. A married women is prohibited from performing vratas (vows necessitating austerity) as by doing so she would diminish the longevity of her husband (IV, 17). A married women, who has lost her husband by flight, death, or by his sanyāsa, or impotency or becoming an out-caste, is eligible for re-marriage (IV, 30). The Sūdra need not observe fasts (to secure purification for a sin), as by making a mere gift he can secure the result. (VI, 51, repeated in XI, 28.)

129

49, $\it ll.$ 10-12. Relaxation of Duties for S'ūdras and Women

S'rī Bhāgavata rules:

Strī-s'ūdra-dvijabandhūnām trayo na s'ruti-gocarā Iti Bhāratamākhyānam muninā kṛpayāhṛtam ||

i.e. 'For women, S'ūḍras and degraded Brāhmaṇas access to the Veda is shut and the compassionate sage has provided for them the $Mah\bar{a}bh\bar{a}rata$ instead.' Commenting on this dictum, Mitramis'ra states ($Paribh\bar{a}s\bar{a}$, p. 37) that the knowledge of $\bar{A}tman$ which the Veda will give can be equally furnished by the epics (Purāṇas). S'ūḍras and women are entitled to knowledge of the $\bar{A}tman$ but not through the Vedas. He quotes another Purāṇa to the effect that the devout S'ūḍra acquires true knowledge through the reading of the Purāṇas and that according to some sages there is parity between women and S'ūḍras:

Asti s'udrasya s'usrīisoh purānenaiva vedanam l Vadanti kecin munayah strīnām s'ūdrā-samānatām ll

Like others who die at Kās'i they can obtain mukti by death there.

130

49, U. 12-15. UPANAYANA FOR WOMEN

Dr. A. S. Altekar in his Position of Women in Hindu Civilisation, 1938, shows that originally girls had upanavana performed for them like boys, and performed the daily Sandhya rites, as Sīta. is said to have done in the Sundarakānda of the Rāmāyana Mitramis'ra in his Samskāra-prakās a (pp. 402-405) (XIV, 48), deals with the question of upanayana for women. Hārīta is cited to show that women are of two classes, Brahmavādinī and Sadhyovadhūh; the former has the sacrificial fire, study of the Veda and alms within her own house; the latter has upanayana done when marriage is nigh, and then the wedding is celebrated. Yama is quoted to show that in past ages $(pur\bar{a}-kalpe)$ girls used to have the girdle of upananayana (mauñjī-bandhanam), study of Veda, and the recitation of the Savitri, when their fathers, uncles or elder brothers used to teach them, and arrange for their daily begging within the house itself, but the girls were to abjure the wearing of the antelope skin like the boys, and matted locks. The reduction of the duties of women, or as status, as modern observers may view it, is seen in Manu:

"The samskāras, which are done for boys with Vedic mantras should be performed for girls without Vedic recitation; the completion of the samskāras for girls is for the protection of their bodies. It should be done in proper time and form!" Manu rules that for girls marriage should be regarded as the substitute for upanayana, as a Vedic ceremony, the service of the husband as equal to living in the house of the Guru, and attention to domestic duties as tantamount to attention to the sacred fire. Her association in all karma gives the wife an equal part in them with the husband, even though her function is passive.

As late as about 150 B.C. the freedom given to women to perform Vedic rites is illustrated by the Nānāghāt inscription of Queen Nāyanikā, widow of Satakarni I, who states that she lived the life of brahmacarya (after the death of her husband, as the faithful Hindu widow is enjoined to live) and that she performed the $R\bar{a}jas\bar{u}ya$ and Asvamedha sacrifices. But, whether her claim relates to her association in these sacrifices as $Patta-Mahis\bar{\imath}$ (senior queen) with her husband, when he performed them, or by herself, as Dr. Altekar holds (op. cit. p. 243) it is hard to say, but the probability is in favor of the former view, as her description of her own life fits in with the Brahmanic ideals of the virtuous widow.

131

49, U. 16-19. REDUCTION OF STRINGENCY OF RULES OF TAINT

The rules of purification (studdhi) were made less stringent in the later smrtis like Paras'ara's, and the rules about the acquisition of taint (dosa) necessitating purification were made easier, by application of the principle that with waning power and the passage of cycles of time, men required more lenient construction of offences and expiation. This is illustrated by the rules regarding untouchability (asprsya) following either one's varna or some special act. Thus, according to a siloka cited in Dharmapradipa (p. 150), contamination which arises even from conversation with a low-born person or an out-caste (patita) in Kṛta-yuga, from touch in Tretāyuga, and from eating his food in the Dvapara-yuga, arises in the Kali-yuga only by actually doing the forbidden act. Parāsara ruled that the sin of as (association with these guilty of the five inexpiable sins $(mah\bar{a}-b\bar{a}taka)$ can be removed by a vrata. Another dictum states that the sin of touching a Candala is removed by looking after the taint at the Sun, (ib. p. 152); (Candālaspars ane sadya ādityam avalokayet.) Similarly, in the Krta-yuga, one had to leave the country in which there were out-castes and sinners: in Treta-yuga, it was deemed enough if one left the village in which they were found, and in Dvapara-yuga the particular family concerned; but in the Kali-yuga, it is enough to leave the actual perpetrator of an offence. At the same time, certain general exemptions from impurity by touch were given. Thus, artisans, cultivators, physicians, servants, $(d\bar{a}s\bar{\imath}\cdot d\bar{a}sa)$, kings, and learned Brāhmaņas are always pure (p. 158.) In festivals, pilgrimages, marriages and sacrifices, there should be no consideration of purity or impurity following touch (p. 151.) The literature of suddhi, which is treated elaborately in the later smṛtis and nibandhas (digests), illustrates the principles suggested in the text.

167

Yājñavalkya (III, 28-29) lays down automatic purification (sadyas-s'aucam) in the following cases:

Rtvijām dīkṣitānām ca yajīīyam karma kurvatām |
Satrī-vratī-brahmacārī-dātṛ-brahmavidām tathā ||
Dāne vivāhe yajīe ca saṃgrāme desaviplave |
Āpadyapihikaṣṭāyām sadyas-saucam vidhīyate ||

Other dicta against the occurrence of impurity in certain cases are indicated in the following rules of Paithinasi and Angiras:

- 1. Atha deva-pratistāyām gaṇa-yātrādi-karmaṇi | Srāddhādau pitr-yajñe ca kanyā-dāne ca no bhavet ||
- 2. Rājya-nās astu yena syāt vinā rājītā sva-mandale | Prayāsyatasca sangrāme home prāsthānike sati | Mantrādi-tarpanair-vāpi prajānām sānti-karmani | Go-mangalādau vaisyānam kṛṣi-kālātyayeṣvapi | Āsaucam na bhavel-loke sarvatr-ānyatra vidyate |

132

49, U. 19-20. RELAXATION OF RULE FOR AGE, INFIRMITY ETC.

The rule of Cyavana (cited in Dharmapradīpa, p. 158) illustrates the equitable rule lowering the amount of expiation in the case children, old persons and women:

 $B\bar{a}la$ -vṛddha-strīṇām ardham pr \bar{a} yascittam; \bar{A} sodas $\bar{a}t$ $b\bar{a}lah$; saptaty \bar{u} rdhvam vṛddah;

Similar exemptions exist in many other sections of Dharmas'āstra for these three classes as well as persons who are ill.

133

50, ll. 1-2. Struggles of Bhakti-mārga Adherents with Smārtas

The struggles of the saints of the Bhakti-mārga with the strict adherants of Dharmas āstra are recounted in Hindu and Saiva hagiology. To begin with, the saints were not of the first varṇa and accordingly had no right to teach religion, according to strict rule. Again, within the fold of devotees (bhaktāḥ) the traditional rule of superior and inferior, and the inferiority of women for spiritual exercises, was discarded. The saints often attacked caste distinctions, e.g. Kabīr (R. G. Bhandarkar, Vaiṣṇavism Saivism, 1913, pp. 70, 83), Caitanya's repudiation of caste in admission of disciples, and by the Ucchiṣṭa-Gaṇapati sect (p. 148). Some of them scoffed at the rites prescribed by Dharmas āstra. Thus Nāmdev derided fasts and pilgrimages (ib. p. 90) and Tukārām followed suit by condemning mere physical purification and mechanical rites (ib. p. 92) Illustrations can be easily multiplied.

134

50, Il. 8-12. EMANCIPATION OF INDIVIDUAL EARNINGS FROM FAMILY CONTROL AND JOINT-OWNERSHIP

For the Roman Law of the growth of individual right in one's own earnings through the application of the principle of peculium castrense, under which Augustus had conceded to a filius-familius on service the right to dispose by testament of what he had acquired in the exercise of his profession, so as to give a soldier ultimately the right to dispose of all his property, including gifts, legacies etc. see J. Muirhead, Historical Introduction to Roman Law, 1899, pp. 322-323, as well Sir H. Maine's Ancient Law, ed. Pollock, p. 149.

The Hindu Gains of Learning Act (Act XXX of 1930) provides that notwithstanding any custom, or rule of interpretation of Hindu Law, no gains of learning shall be held not to be the exclusive property of the acquirer. It has set at rest the old controversies about the application of the rules of Manu (IX, 206) and Yājñavalkya (II, 118-119) and the comments thereon, supported by citations from Nārada, (p. 190 ed. Jolly) verse 10, Vasiṣtha (17, 51) Kātyāyana (ed. Kane, vv. 866 to 880) Vyāsa etc. The course of evolution in freeing individual earnings seems to have followed, as in Rome, the freeing of Saurya-dhanam (the earnings of valor) and $vidy\bar{a}$ -dhanam (the gains of science or learning), so long as they were not acquired by the use of family property, from the common estate liable to partition between co-parceners, and then extended by analogy to the fees of the sacrificial priest, gifts $(d\bar{a}na)$, commercial or trade earnings etc. The discussion may be followed in $Vyavah\bar{a}ramay\bar{u}kha$ (ed. Kane, pp. 124-128).

135

50, 71. REDUCTION IN THE NUMBER OF VALID MARRIAGES

The recommendation of Gandharva unions for kṣatriyas was a recognition of realities, as kings often added women to their antah-pura, after seduction. Inclusion of the form under marriage was in the interests of the girl. Later on, the disfavor into which it fell, owing to misuse, led to the rule that even a Gandharva union should be subsequently sanctified by a formal celebration. with religious rites. See Altekar's Position of Women in Hindu *Civilisation, pp. 34-58. Poets like Kālidāsa invested the Gāndharva union with a halo of romance, but it is probable that it was not accepted except as an unpleasant necessity, since the subsequent form of marriage ceremony would be of one who was not a virgin $(kany\bar{a})$. Commentators were hard put to explain away the rule that the bride should be a virgin, and had to interprete $kany\bar{a}$, as merely a term for the bride. The old approval by Baudhavana of the Gandharva form, on the ground of 'its naturally being the sequel to love' (Snehānugatatvāt, I, II, 13, 7) gives place to restriction of it to the military caste and to the imposition by Devala, for example, of a subsequent marriage ceremony:

> Gāndharveṣu vivāheṣu punar vaivāhiko vidhiḥ | Kartavyas ca tribhir varṇaiḥ samayenāgnisākṣikaḥ || 22

Devala provides for the marriage for the first three varnas, implying that for the last varna the confirmatory religious ceremony was unnecessary (vide, commentary on Manu, VIII, 226).

136

50, ll. 16-17. ADOPTION

From brief rules in the older smrtis of a vague nature (Vasistha, 15, 1-10, Baudhāyana-parisistha, S.B.E., XIV, pp. 334-336) a mass of discussion has grown on the topic. The valid s'astraic justification for adoption is the necessity for a man to have a male child to perform his obsequies, and save him from falling into the hell, Put. A man without a son is therefore in distress (abadi). On the other hand parents in poverty may want to give away their sons to childless men who would bring them up, and perhaps give the sons property, which they can not obtain from the natural parents. This also is distress $(\bar{a}pad)$. The power to dispose of a son is a remnant of the old patria potestas, for which there is sanction in the story of S'unas's'epa, told in the Aitareya Brāhmana, whom his father sold to King Haris'candra under pinch of poverty. The power to give away a son is limited, as the act is justified, by religious necessity of a son. Hence the rule that an only son cannot be given away in adoption. A device for defeating this rule may perhaps be seen in the recognition of a son belonging to "two fathers" (Dvvāmusvāyana). The filiation of an adopted son with the rights of reversioners has to be reconciled; and this leads to the rules of consent of such reversioners. As adoption is a creation by a magical act (dattahoma) of a new son, the principles of consanguinity and conformity to probability of parentage, if the son can have been a real son, arise. The disputed rule of the Kālika-purāna as to the invalidity of adopting a boy, whose $c\bar{u}d\bar{a}$ -karma (tonsure) and initiation (upanayana) are already over, is perhaps an attempt to tide over the difficulty of adoptions by young men in articulo mortis. The whole structure has been built up by legalists.

See Ganganath Jha, Hindu Law in its Sources, II, 1933, pp. 217-219; and, Jolly, Law and Custom, ed. 1928, pp. 156-166.

137

50, U. 18-32. STATUS OF WOMEN (GENERAL)

See my Ancient Indian Economic Thought, 1934, 53-54, and Altekar's Position of Women in Hindu Civilisation, passim.

In Hindu law a woman is always unfree or dependant, and is the terminus of the family. Gautama enunciated the rule (XVIII, 1) Asvatantrā dharme strī.

See Manu, V, 147-149, and IX, 2-3; Yājñvalkya, I, 183, 186; Viṣṇu, 25, 4-6.

See also Gurudoss Banerjee, Hindu Law of Marriage and Strīdhana; Jolly, History of Hindu Law, pp. 76-81, and pp. 226, v 259 (history of female property); and Jayaswal, Manu and Yājñavalkya, pp. 225-235, and pp. 256-261.

138

50, ll. 20-25. Workhouses for Destitute Women

See Kautilya, II, 23, p. 114:

Yāsca anişkāsinyah proşita-vidhavā nyangā kanyakā vā ātmānam bibhryuh; tāḥ sva-dāsībhiḥ anusāryasopagraham karma kārayitavyāḥ; svayam āgaccantīnam vā sūtrasālām pratyuṣasi bhānḍa-vetanavinimayam kārayet. Sūtra-parīkṣārtha-mātran pradīpah.

Striyā mukhasandars ane anya kārya sambhāṣāyām vā pūrva sāhasa dandah.

139

51, ll. 1-2. Wife Shares in Husband's Punya

Āpastamba (II, 16-19):

"No division takes place between husband and wife (16). For, from the time of marriage, they are united in religious ceremonies, (18); likewise also as regards the rewards for works (karma) by which spiritual merit is acquired, and with respect to the acquisition of property." (Buehler, S.B.E., II, pp. 136-137).

140

51, U. 5-10. BRHASPATI ON THE RIGHTS OF THE WIFE

See Brhaspatismṛti (ed. Rangaswami, Vyavahāra, XXVI, 92-94):

Amnāye smṛti-tantre ca pūrvācāryaisca sūribhiḥ |
Sarīrārdham smṛtā bhāryā punyāpunyaphale samā ||
Yasya noparatā bhāryā dehārdham tasya jīvati |
Jīvatyardhasarīre tu katham anyaḥ svamāpnuyāt ||

The theory of the identity of husband and wife, each being incomplete without the other, is found in a passage of the Vājasaneyi-Brāhmaṇa cited by Kullūka in commenting on Manusmṛti, IX, 45. This passage is:

Ardho ha eṣa ātmanaḥ; tasmāj-jāyām na vindate, naitāvat prajāyate, asarvo hi tāvad-bhavati. Atha, yadaiva jāyām vindate, atha prajāyate, tarhi sarvo bhavati. Tathā ca, etad-vedavido viprā vadanti—'Yo bhartū saiva bharyā smṛtā'

"A man is only half his self. When he takes a wife, he is incomplete, and so not fully born. When he takes a wife only is he fully born and becomes complete. So, Brāhmaṇas versed in the Vedas declare: 'Verily he who is known as the husband is also the wife'.

The verse of Manu, for supporting which the above passage was cited by Kullūka, is worth quoting:

Etāvāneva puruṣo yajjāyā ātmā prajeti ha l Viprāḥ prāhuḥ tathā caitat 'yo bhartā sā smṛtāṅganā ' ||

The connection between the Vedic passage and the dictum of Manu is self-evident.

The equality of sons and daughters, which follows from analogy, is stated by Manu (IX, 130) thus:

Yathaivātmā tathā putraḥ, putreṇa duhitā samā | Tasyām ātmani tiṣṭantyām, katham anyo dhanam haret || "The son and one's self are identical. The daughter is equal to the son. So when she, as one's self remains, how can any one else take the estate?"

It is a great progress to this stage from Āpastamba (II, 14, 4) who placed the daughter in the line of inheritance after not only the sons but the teacher and his pupils. (The $s\bar{u}tra$ runs "Or, the daughter." Haradatta says that according to some writers the succession of daughters is on failure of sons, and that others hold that the daughter comes after the pupils of the guru, who, according to an earlier $s\bar{u}tra$, inherits on failure of sons and sapinas. Buehler holds the second to be the correct interpretation of Āpastamba's view.) (S.B.E. II, p. 132, n.).

141

51, ll. 11-12. RIGHT OF UNMARRIED DAUGHTER TO EXPENSES OF MARRIAGE

The brother should spend from his share of the paternal estate atleast one-fourth on the marriage of his sister. This is the rule in both Manu (IX, 118) and Yājñavalkya, (II, 124):

(a) M. Svebhyo amsebhyastu kanyābhyah pradadur-bhṛātarah pṛthak!

Svāt-svādamsāccaturbhāgam patitāh syur-aditsavah II

(b) Y. Asamkṛtāstu samskāryā bhrātṛbhiḥ pūrvasamskṛtāḥ \Bhaginyasvca nijādamsvāt dattvāmsvam tu turīyakam \|

The rule of proportion laid down here was capable of different interpretations, and, as described by Dr. Altekar (loc. cit., p. 290-291), might lead to anomalies. The intention of the jurists is stated by Devala as making provision for the daughter's marriage (Smrticandrikā, p. 625). Vīramitrodaya (Vyavahāra, p. 582) holds that a brother should spend an amount equal to his share if the fourth reserved for his sister's marriage proves insufficient. Nārada (XIII, 34) rules that a brother should meet the expenses from his own earnings if there is no ancestral property:

Avidyamāne pitrārthe svāms amudhrtya vā punah \
Avas yakāryāh samskārah bhrātrbhih pūrvasamkrtaih ||

That the marriage expenses of the daughter were a charge on the family was established in Kauṭilya's time, (p. 161):

Sannivista-samam asannivistebhyo naives anikam dadyuh: kanyābhyas ca pradūnikam

i.e. "Brothers who are unmarried should be given as much as the cost of marriage of the married brothers; and unmarried daughters shall be given what is payable at their marriage."

Kautilya logically includes dowry in marriage expenses.

142

51, Il. 17-19. MARRIAGE AN OBLIGATION TO WOMAN

Brahmanism laid stress on the value of married life for the due performance of religious rites, and the status of the householder (grhī) was ennobled. This is indicated in Manusmrti, II, 77:

Yathā vāyum samāsritya vartante sarva-jantavah l Tathā grhastham āsritya vartante sarva āsramāh l

Hence, the Taittrīya Brāhmaṇa (II, 2, 2, 6) declared that the wifeless person (widower or bachelor) was without yajña (a-yajñi-ko vā eṣa yo apatnīkah). The Mahābhārata (Ādi. 114, 36) told a story to the effect that the husband-less woman was sinful. The obligatory nature of marriage to women is illustrated by a verse of Yamasmṛti to the effect that a father should give a grown up maiden in marriage to a good man, if available, and if not even to a bad man:

Dadyāt guṇavate kanyām nagnikām brāhmacārine | Api vā guṇaḥīnāya noparundhyāt rajasvalām ||

The praise of the wedded estate is thus made by Vasistha:

Gṛhastha eva pravrajet, gṛhastha stūyate yataḥ \\
Caturṇām āsramāṇām tu gṛhasthastu visisyate \|
Sarveṣām api vai teṣām veda-smṛti-vidhānataḥ \|
Gṛhastha ucyate sreṣṭaḥ sa trīn etān bibharti hi \|

The upanayana of women was prohibited by Yājñavalkya (I, 13); and their rites upto marriage were to be done without Vedic mantras. Marriage was the $samsk\bar{a}ra$ for women, and it was to take the place of upanayana, according to Manu (II, 67):

Vaivāhiko vidhih strīṇām samskāro vaidikah smṛtaḥ | Patisevā guror-vāso gṛhārtho agniparikriyā ||

143

51, ll. 20-24. Alleged Buddhist Influence in Securing Sex Equality

Dr. K. P. Jayaswal, Manu and Yājñavalkya, pp. 234-235, argues that the mind of the Brahmin lawyer was touched by the inferiority of women as compared with men in inheritance etc., because the Buddhists recognised the right of women equally with men to entry into the monastic order. The assumption is incorrect. Hinduism does not make women spiritually inferior to man, even though it does not encourage spinsterhood or asceticism for women. Jainism made a distinction between the spiritual capacity of man and woman (E. W. Hopkins, Religions of India). That the ascetic life should not be undertaken by girls without due spiritual urge was the Hindu view. The Mahābhārata mentions a woman, named Sulabhā, who practised austerity and remained unmarried so as to achieve salvation (XII, 325, 103):

Sāham tasmin kule jātā bhartaryasati madvidhe Vinītā mokṣadharmeṣu carāmyekā munivratam ||

144

51, ll. 24-25. Indissolubility of Marriage

Divorce $(mok \hat{s}a)$ has to be distinguished from separation $(ty\bar{a}ga)$. Manu lays down the indissolubility of marriage in the following s'loka (IX, 101):

Anyonyasya avyabhīcāro bhaved-āmaraṇāntikaḥ Eṣa dharmaḥ samāsena jīteyaḥ strī-pumsayoḥ paraḥ

"'Let mutual fidelity continue till death,' this may be considered the highest law for husband and wife."

The survival of the marriage tie even after death is one of the inducements held out to women persuaded to commit sati:

Tisraḥ-koṭi-ardhakoṭī ca yāni romāṇi mānuṣe \\
Tāvat-kālam vased-svargam bhartāram yānugaccati \|
Vyāla-grāhī yathā vyālam bilād-uddharate balāt \|
Evam uddhṛtya bhartāram tenaiva saha modate \|
(Parās aras mrti, IV, 31-32).

The rules of Yama, S'ātātapa, and Kātyāyana allowing a girl married to an improper person to remarry again, are explained away by Mādhavācārya (Parās aras mṛti, vol. I, pt. 2, pp. 90-91) as relating to other yugas and as inapplicable to the present times:

So ayam punar-udvāho yugāntara-viṣayah. Tath \bar{a} ca \bar{A} ditya pur \bar{a} ne:

Ūdhāyāḥpunarudvāham jyesṭāms am go-vadham tathā | Kalau pañca ha kurvīta bhṛatṛ-jāyām kamaṇḍalum ||

Kautilya accepted the rule that in Dharma-vivāha (the first four forms of marriage) there could be no divorce:

Amokṣo dharma-vivāhāñām. (p. 155)

But if the husband and wife hate each other and agree to release one another they can do so.

The rules allowing remarriage of widows and women whose husbands have long not been heard of etc., which were probably operative once, have been explained as interdicted for this age. Among them is the famous rule of Nārada (XII, 67):

Naște mrte pravrajite klībe ca patite patau | Pancasu āpatsu nārīņām patir-anyo vidhīvate ||

145

51, 1. 27. CONDEMNATION OF PROLONGED CELIBACY

Dīrgha-brahmacaryam is one of the Kalivarjyas, according to Brhan-nāradīya-purāṇa (cited in Dharma-pradīpa, p. 50):

Dattākṣatāyāḥ kanyāyāḥ punar-dānam parasya ca l Dīrgha-kālam brahmacaryam naramedhāsvamedhakau ll The relevant clause prohibiting prolonged study and celibacy hich are involved in Brahmacarya) is cited from the Brahma-

(which are involved in Brahmacarya) is cited from the Brahma-purāṇa in Mādhavācārya's bhāṣya on Parāsara-smṛti (vol. I, pt. 1, p. 133, Islampurkar's ed.)

The authors of the Dharma-pradīpa explain that the interdiction of prolonged brahmacarya of 24 years and more prescribed in the Grhyasūtras is impracticable at present (p. 53).

Manusmrti (III, 1-2) lays down that one should have studied the three Vedas, or two, or atleast one before entering the order of householder (Grhastasrama) and that the vow of studying the Vedas, must be kept for 36, 18, or 9 years, or until the student has learnt the Veda perfectly. Manu's dictum in regard to the duration of brahmacarya is identical with the dicta of all smārtas, with the exception of Baudhāyana, (I, 2, 3, 1-5) who prescribes periods of forty-eight years, or twenty-four years, or twelve years for each Veda studied, or atleast one year for each $K\bar{a}nda$ of the Veda studied, or till the Veda has been mastered. He cites the Vedic injunction that one should kindle the sacred fire when one's hair has not turned grey (Jata-butrah krsna-keso agnim ādadhīta) 'lest the duty of offering the Srauta Agnihotra be neglected', for, as he himself remarks, 'life is uncertain'. This extra-ordinarily long period of brahmacarva is taken up by S'abarasvāmin's (I, iii, 2) discussion, as the sruti (cited) and the smṛti (Baudhāvana) are in conflict. S'abara holds that the smrti rule is invalid, and he is in line with the later smrtis which include dīrghabrahmacarya among the interdictions of the present age (Kaliyuga). Kumārila attempts a reconciliation by suggesting that the dirghabrahmacarya rule is for those who are physically unsound and not quite fit for married life, but who are unable to remain celibate through lack of self-control. A text from the Atharva-veda is cited in support of the rule to which Baudhayana has given his adherence, to show that S'abarasvāmin's summary rejection of it is untenable.

146

51, 1. 28. Praise of Grhasthas rama

For the panegyric on the house-holder's life see: Manusmrti, III, 77-80: (Buehler's trn.)

"As all living creatures subsist by receiving support from air even so (the members) of all orders susbsist by receiving support from the householder. Because men of the three (orders) are daily supported by the householder with (gifts of) sacred knowledge and food, therefore (the order) of householders is the most excellent order. (The duties of) this order, which cannot be practised by men with weak organs, must be carefully observed by him who desires imperishable (bliss in) heaven, and constant happiness in this life, the sages, the manes, the gods, the Bhūtas, and guests ask the householders (for offerings and gifts); hence he who knows (the law) must give to them (what is due to each)".

For parallel passages, see Vasiṣṭha, VIII, 14-16, and Viṣṇu, LIX, 27-29.

147

52, ll. 1-2. The Widow's Power of Alienation

The relevant texts of Kātyāyana have formed the basis of discussion by the digests. These are arranged as under by Mr. Kane in his reconstruction of Kātyāyana:

Āsurādişu yallabdham strīdhanam paitṛkam striyā | Abhāve tadapatyānām mātā-pitros-tadiṣyate || (920)

That Strīdhana which was obtained by a woman from her parents in the forms of marriage beginning with the āsura is desired (held) to go to her parents on failure of her progeny.

Aputrā s'ayanam bhartuḥ pālayantī gurau sthitā |
Bhuñjīta āmaraṇāt kṣāntā; dāyādā ūrdhvam āpnuyuḥ ||
(921)

A sonless widow, preserving the bed of her husband unsullied, and residing with her elders, and being self-controlled (or forbearing) should enjoy her husband's property till her death. After her death, the other heirs of the husband will succeed to it.

Svaryāte svāmini strī tu grāsācchādana-bhāginī \
Avibhakte dhanāms am tu prāpnoti āmaranāntikam \(\(\) (922)\)
Bhoktumarhati kļptāms am guru-s us ruşane ratā \(\)
Na kuryād yadi sus rūsām caila-piņde niyojayet \(\(\) (923)\)

When her husband is gone to heaven, the wife is entitled only to food and raiment, if her husband was not separated, or she may get a share in the ancestral wealth till her death. The widow intent on serving her elders, is entitled to enjoy the share allotted to her; if she does not serve her elders, only food and clothes should be given her:

Mṛte bhartari bhartṛams am labheta kulapālikā | Yāvad-jīvam; na hi svāmyam dānādhamana-vikraye || (924)

Vratopavāsaniratā brahmacarye vyavasthitā
☐
Damadānaratā nityam aputrāpi divam vrajet || (925).

'A wife who seeks the honor of the family gets the share of her husband till her death; but she has no power of gift, mortgage or sale. A widow engrossed in religious observances, fixed in celibacy, always self-restrained, and making gifts goes to heaven, even though she is sonless.'

These rules give the widow only a life-interest in her husband's estate, and they form the foundation of the modern right of the Hindu widow to her husband's estate, and after her the reversioners. The rules are old, as Kauṭilya (p. 153) lays down identical injunction:

Aputrā patis ayanam pālayantī guru-samīpe s trīdhanam āyuḥkṣayat bhuñjīta; āpadartham hi strīdhanam; ūrdhvam dāyādam gaccet. (III, 2)

The rules were interpreted so as to allow the widow to incur expenditure of various kinds, e.g., gifts on the ground of the spiritual benefit accruing therefrom to her and to her husband, religious expenditure etc. The extension is made in Vyavahāra-mayīkha (Kane's trn, p. 152) in explaining rule 920 of Kātyāyana:

"The text refers to a prohibition of gifts and the like intended for bards (vandi), panegyrists (cārana) and the like. But gifts for unseen (i.e. spiritual) purposes and mortgages and the like conducive to those purposes are valid, on account of the rule (viz. 925) of Kātyāyana".

Some of the verses of Kātyāyana cited above are ascribed to Yama by the Smrticandrikā (Vyavahāra, pp. 665 seq.)

Devanna Bhatta, the author of the Smrticandrikā also extends the power of the widow to make gifts etc., in spite of the apparent limitation of her power: (trn. Krishnaswami Aiyar, 1867, pp. 169, 170).

"The competency of the widow to make gifts for religious and charitable purposes, such as the maintenance of old and helpless persons, being sanctioned by law, the above passage must be held as contemplating the want of independence of a widow in making gifts etc. for purposes not being religious or charitable, but purely temporal, such as gifts to dances and the like. A widow thus possesses independent power to make gifts for religious objects, and therefore the same author enjoins the constant presentation of gifts by a widow for religious purposes. . . . The daily making of such gifts will be impracticable if the widow were held to possess no independent power. It is hence to be understood that the law does not deny the independent power of a widow even to make a mortgage or sale, for the purpose of providing herself with the necessary funds for the discharge of religious duties."

148

52, ll. 1-5. Divorce Open to Non-Brāhmaņas

Cf. Dr. Altekar (op. cit. p. 102):

"Divorce went out of vogue only in the higher sections of Hindu society. The Sūdra-kamalākara, written in the 17th century, expressly permits it to Sūdras and other lower castes." Kamalākara relies on a rule of Nārada (not found in Jolly's edn.):

Na Sūdrāyāh sṃrtah kāla, na ca dharma-vyatikramah l Viseṣato aprasūtāyāh striyāh samvatsarād-vidhih ||

The verse ends samvatsaraparā sthitih in Nāradīya-Manu-samhitā, (ed. Trivandram, 1929) p. 145.

Kautilya limited divorce to the forms of marriage other than the first four, which were in use by non-Brāhmaṇas only (III, 4 or p. 155).

149

52, ll. 6-10. KALIVARJYA

See Note 128, ante (pp. 163-164) on the relaxations of Yuga-dharma.

The rules interdicting certain ancient practices on the ground of their unfitness for the weakened men of the present age are generally cited as Kalivarjya and are to be found in the Purāṇas and some of the later smṛtis. In the Vanaparva (clix, 11-34) of the Mahābhārata an account of the gradual decline of power and dharma from yuga to yuga is described. Some of the practices of the ancients may prove repugnant to present day conscience. But they should not be condemned on that account. Thus Parās aras mṛti (I, 33):

Yuge yuge ca ye dharmās tatra tatra ca ye dvijāh!

Teṣām nindā na kartayā yuga-rūpā hi te dyijāh!

Thus, we should not condemn the injunction of Manu (VIII, 371) that the wife, who proud of her virtues or birth contravenes the directions of her husband should be thrown by the king to the dogs to be devoured by them. It refers to a different age.

Mādhavācārya collected a number of texts on Kalivarjya and these have been printed in his edition of Parās arasmṛti (I, i, pp. 131-137) with valuable comments of his own by the late Mahāmahopādhyāya Vāman Sāstri Islāmpūrkar. Hemādri, Madanapārijāta and other authorities give quotations on Kalivarjya. In the recently published Dharmapradīpa (pp. 50-53, and pp. 232-244) a list of the inhibitions of the Kali-yuga is given and the premissibility of such practices as the remarriage of widows, for which smṛti sanction may be cited, in the present age, is discussed.

The most accessible collection of practices inhibited for the Kaliyuga is that of Mr. P. V. Kane, in a paper on Kalivarjya, which he contributed to the Eighth Oriental Conference. He has catalogued 49 practices as so forbidden, and stated in each case the older authority, enjoining or allowing the practice condemned later as Kalivarjya. He holds that the doctrine of decadence as time passes is referred to in Rgveda, X, 10, 10, where in the famous dialogue between Yama and Yami the former is reported as saying: "those later ages are yet to come when sisters will do what is not sisterlike." The Nirukta implies the decadence in the contrast it makes between the intuitive knowledge of Dharma which ancient sages had and the later had not: (I, 20)

Sākṣāt kṛtadharmaṇa ṛṣayaḥ babhūvuḥ te avarabhyo asāksātkṛta-dharmasya upades ena mantrān samprāduḥ

The doctrine of decadence is expressed in $\overline{A}pastamba$ (II, 6, 13, 7-9) and Gautama (I, 3-4). The idea is that the sages of old who committed many transgressions, which are against the $s\overline{a}stras$, incurred no sin thereby, because of their spiritual powers, and that if one of the present age, who does not possess such spiritual greatness, commits the same offences he will surely be sinful.

Mr. Kane conjectures that in the five or six centuries preceding the Christian era the theory of the four yugas, their characteristics and of the progressive moral decline from yuga to the yugas following, was fully developed. He also holds that the theory of inhibitions of the Kali-yuga began to be current about the fourth century A.D. The yuga theory appears in its full-fledged form in the Mahābhārata (Vanaparva, ch. 149 and 183), Manu (I, 81-86) and some Purāṇas e.g. Matsya, ch. 142-143, Brāhma, ch. 122-123 and Nāradīya, pt. I, ch 41. The earliest incription mentioning the sins of kali-yuga is one of the Pallava king Simhavarman (Epig. Ind., VIII, p, 162: Kaliyugadoṣāvāsanna-dharma-uddharaṇa-nitya-sannaddhasya).

Āpastamba's rejection of the old rule of giving all property to the eldest son as opposed to $s\bar{a}stras$ may be based on the kalivarjya idea, through he does not expressly mention it. Uddhāra-vibhāga or giving a larger share to the eldest son on partition was known to early smṛtis (Gautama, xxviii, 5-7, Baudhāyana, II, 3, 9) and is sancioned by Manu (I, 112 and 1170, but it is one of the Kalivarjyas. It is noteworthy, as indicative of the want of unanimity as regards what is or what is not properly prohibited for the Kali-yuga, that 'Medhātithi, after' mentioning the uddhāra-vibhāga as kalivarjya according to some, rejects the prohibition.

(s'āstraih vipratisiddham, II, 6, 14, 10)

When an authority allows a practice and another condemns it two ways of reconciling them, without rejecting the claim of either to count as authority, are open: one is to see in the opposition an option to follow the one or the other, and the other is to reject the older in favour of the newer rule, on the ground that the practice allowed by the former is Kali-varjya.

150

52, ll. 10-12. Candragupta's Marriage to His Brother's Widow

The story is given in an extract from a lost drama of Visākhadatta, named Devi-Candragupta, which has been discovered in fragments in works on dramaturgy like Nātya-darpaņa, and is confirmed by an explanatory passage in S'ankarārya's commentary on Bāna's Harsacarita, which contains an allusion to the slaving of the libidinous S'āka king by Candragupta disguised as a woman. The story is that the S'āka ruler desired Rāmagupta, the elder brother and predecessor of Candragupta, to send to his harem the queen Dhruvadevi, that Rāmagupta pussilanimously agreed and sent the queen, whom Candragupta rescued after slaving the enemy, According to the Mañjusrīmūlatantra, Rāmagupta was killed by Candragupta, who married his sister-in-law the widowed queen. Dhruvadevī. (See Jayaswal, Imperial History of India, 1934, p. 35, R. D. Banerji, History of India, 1934, pp. 168-9, and Dr. V. Raghavan's critical summary of the discussion in the Journal of the Benares Hindu University, 1937).

151

52, ll. 14-19. GRADUAL DISAPPEARANCE OF NIYOGA

Niyoga, the custom of a brother raising off-spring for a brother on his wife, is accepted by Baudhāyana (II, 2, 17, 62,) Gautama, XVIII, 4-14, Vasiṣṭha, XVII, 14, 55-56, Viṣṇusmṛti XV, 3, Manu, IX, 56-63, 143-147, Yājñavalkya, II, 127-128, Nārada, XII, 80-88, and Hārita, IV, 17. In the Mahābhārata, we find cases of Niyoga applied to a wife, when the husband is alive. Later in the Smṛtis it is restricted to the widow. Its use in the Epic for widows was common (XIII, 12, 23):

Nārī tu patyabhāvevai devaram kurute patim

There was no restriction in the Epic on the number of off-spring that might be raised by niyoga on a woman. Later, it was limited to one son only. The Epic says that Kuntī protested against being asked to submit to Niyoga more than once $(\overline{A}di, 132, 63-64)$ on the ground of contravening Dharma. Earlier, three sons were allowed to be raised $(ibid. \ I, 126)$. It was tantamount, as Dr. Altekar has pointed out $(op. \ cit. \ p. \ 172)$, to a virtual marriage as the birth of girls did not count for discontinuance.

Apastamba is the earliest $sm\bar{a}rta$ to condemn it. He held that the spiritual benefit would go to the begetter and not the putative father (II, 6, 13, 8). Manu condemned the practice as animal, (pasudharma, IX, 66 ff.). The restrictions proceed by limiting the duration of niyoga to the birth of two sons (Manu, IX, 61), and afterwards generally to one son. The use of the device, if there were children already, was interdicted (Baudhāyana, II, 20). The disposition to use it for satisfying the carnal appetite is condemned by Nārada (XII, 80-88). The application of it for reasons of cupidity is condemned by Vasiṣṭha (XVI, 57):

Lobhān-nāsti niyogaḥ |

The popularity of adoption as an alternative, and stricter ideas of morality, outraged by the practice, led to its being included among the $Kalivarjy\bar{a}h$ in the enumeration of which it usually leads. (Dharmapradipa, pp. 50-53).

152

52, U. 21-22. Prohibition of Hypergamous Unions

In Mādhāvācārya's bhāṣya on Parās'arasmṛti there is reference to the homage due from a pupil to the asavarṇa or inferior caste wives of the guru (vol. I, pt. i, 328). But such unions are rejected in the present age as kalivarjya. Thus the Bṛhannāradīya (cited in Dharma-pradīpa, p. 50) says:

Samudra-yātṛsvīkārah kamaṇdalu-vidhāraṇam | Dvijānam asavarṇesu kanyāsūpagatam tathā ||

153

.52. U. 30. GROWTH OF BELIEF IN MAGICAL PRACTICES

Belief in the efficacy of magic and witch-craft, which is natural in a primitive age, is reflected in the Kautilīya (IV, 3, 4 and XIII, 32 etc.) In fact there was wide-spread belief that it was owing to Kautilya's own powers as a magician that the Nandas were overthrown and Candragupta enthroned in their stead. Kāmandaka, who belongs to the Gupta epoch, alludes to this belief, in which he shared:

Jātavedā ivārciṣmān vedān vedavidāmvaraḥ \
Yo'dhītavān sucaturah caturopyekavedavat ||
Yasyābicāravajreṇa vajrajvalanatejasaḥ |
Papātāmūlataḥ srīmān Suparvā Nandaparvataḥ ||
Ekākī mantrasaktyā yaḥ saktyā Saktidharopamaḥ |
Ājahāra nṛcandrāya Candraguptāya medinīm ||

"Who, by his genius mastered the four Vedas as if they were only one; who, by the blazing thunder-bolt of his magic, completely overthrew the mountain-like Nanda; who, single-handed by force of his intelligence (or magical spells) and with a prowess like that of the wielder of S'akti (i.e., Kārtikeya, the general of the gods) won the earth for Candragupta, delightful like the moon to men."

It will be noted that the reference stresses Kautilya's mastery of the Atharva-veda, the Veda of spells and incantations. The importance of the Atharvaveda for the royal preceptor is indicated in the description by Kālidāsa of the sage Vasistha as atharva-nidhi (Raghuvamsa, I, 59). The Mahābhārata (XIII, 105, 14-45) declares the royal purohita, who knows the Atharva spells, as worth ten ācāryas (E. W. Hopkins, Great Epic of India, 1902, p. 380). Manusmrti, which discountenances wrong practices (vāmācāra) alludes to the efficacy of magic (III, 59) when it declares that the house in which women pronounce a curse for not being honoured will perish completely as if destroyed by magic. Manu also empowers the oppressed Brāhmana to "use in incantations the sacred texts revealed by Atharvan and by Angiras" (XI, 33). Buddhist and Jaina monks were forbidden to practise it, but apparently the prohibition was ineffective as Vis'ākadatta (in the Mudrārāksasa) refers to its practice by a Buddhist ascetic Tivasiddhi. cursions of Shamanist hordes, like those of the S'ākas and the Kusāns, should have given an impetus to the practice of witchcraft. Bāna describes a weird midnight incantation by Bhairavācārya seated on the chest of a corpse in a cremation ground for obtaining the position of a vidyādhara, and the dawn of prosperity to the line of Pusyabhūti, the prince of Sthānes'vara (Thanesar) as the reward for protecting the wizard. The Puranas, especially the S'aiva, and the tantras popularised magic. The Kādambarī and the Dasakumāracarita contain allusions to magic and its efficacy. The spread of Sakti worship emphasised the popular belief in magic, which has always lurked on the country-side.

154

52, U. 24-32 and 53, U. 1-4. SATĪ OR SAHAMARAŅA OR ANVĀROHAŅA

Kautilya condemns suicide of every kind and penalises it by post-mortuary punishments, designed to act as deterrents, and by punishments for those who defend suicide. The verses of Kautilya on the subject are these: (IV, 7, end):

Rajju-s'astra-viṣair-vāpi kāma-krodha-vas'ena yaḥ | Ghātayet svayam ātmānam strī va pāpena mohitā || Rajjunā rājamārge tān candālena apakarşayet!

Na smas ānavidhistesām na sambandhikriyāstathā ||
Bandhus-tesām tu yah kuryāt preta-kārya-kriyā-vidhim!

Tad-gatim sa caret pascāt sva-janād-vā pramucyate!|
Samvatsarena patati patitena samācaran!

Yājanādhyāpanād-yaunād taiscānyo api samācaran!

The reference in the passage to Sati is both implied and explicit ($str\bar{\imath}$ $v\bar{a}$ $p\bar{a}pena$ $mohit\bar{a}$). Dr. Altekar's statement that Kautilya does not mention the custom (op. cit. p. 140) is not correct.

The self-immolation of Kalanos, which the Greek writers mention, though of a sage, suggests the existence of similar practices among women also.

Visnusmṛti (C. 100 A.D.) merely mentions the custom as an alternative to brahmacarya (mṛte bhartari brahmacaryam tadanvārohaṇam vā, (XXV, 14) and adds that a widow by joining her husband on the pyre accompanies him (XX, 36):

Mrtopi bandahavah siakto nanugantum priyam janam | Jayavarjam hi sarvasya yamyah pantha viruddhyate ||

The Brāhmanical revival during the Gupta period led to its coming into prominence. Bhāsa has some characters who commit sati. Kālidāsa knows it, and so does S'ūdraka as well as of course Vātsyāyana. An inscription of A.D. 510 mentions the sati of the wife of a general killed in battle (Gupta Inscriptions, ed. Fleet, p. 93). Harşa's mother died a sumangalī by burning herself before her husband's death (which is suicide, not sahamarana) and his sister Rājya-s'rī was just saved as she was about to ascend the pyre. In the epoch of Rājput dynasties it gains support. It is the age of the late smṛtis. Critical writers like Medhātithi discounted it as opposed to the injunction against suicide. His remark on Manusmṛti, V, 156, is worth citing:

Pumvat strīnām api pratisiddha ātmatyāgah. . . Satyām api pravrttau na dharmatvam, evam iha (anumarane) api na sāstrāyatvam . . . kim ca pratyakṣa-sruti-virodho ayam-; ato astyeva patim anumaranepi striyāh pratisedhah (Jha's ed. I, p. 492).

Devanna Bhatta condemns it as (Vyavahāra, in Smṛti-candrikā, ed. Mysore, p. 598), as an 'inferior dharma,' (nikṛṣṭa-phala).

Bāṇa naturally condemned it as the courtier of Harṣavardhana (A.D. 606-649) in Kādambarī, I, p. 308, ed. Nirṇayasagara,) in view of the known views of his master, whose mother had become sati. The Rājatarangiṇī refers to many cases of sati in Kāṣmir (VII, 481, 490, 858, 1380, 1486; VIII, 448, 1447; V, 206).

"Tantra writers also joined the crusade. They pointed out that woman was the embodiment of the Supreme Goddess, and boldly declared that if a person burnt her with her husband he would be condemned to eternal hell" (Altekar, p. 1, op. cit. p.147).

Bṛhaspati describes the pativratā (chaste wife) thus:

Ārtā ārte, mudite hṛṣṭā, proṣite malinā kṛṣʾā | Mṛte mriyeta yā patyau, sā strī jñeyā pativratā ||

The description of the wife as dying when the husband dies may be poetic exaggeration or a reference to sati. (Sams. 483).

Aparārka marshals the authorities for Sati, and appears to defend it (see p. 111, passage beginning 'Imā nārī avidhava'). The chief smṛti authorities in favour of the practice are Angiras, Hārīta and Vyāsa. Aparārka (p. 112) quotes four writers, who prohibit brāhmaṇa widows from offering sati, and one of them curiously is Angiras:

Yā strī brāhmaṇa-jātīya mṛtam patim anuvrajet |
Sā svargam ātmaghātena nātmānam na patim nayet |
Paithīnasī corroborates the dictum of Angiras and states that saha-maraṇa is the rule for others than brāhmaṇa wives:

Mṛtānugamanam nāsti brāhmaṇyā Brahmas āsanāt | Itareṣām tu varṇānām strīdharmo ayam parah smṛtah ||

Kamalākara Bhaṭṭa's mother Umā committed sati (Kane, p. 432). Nīlakanṭa was his cousin. The illustrious example of a sati in the family is a proof of their conviction of its s'āstraic character, apart from verbal defence.

Mādhavācārya's defence of Sati, as not opposed to such Vedic precepts as those contained in Īsa-upaniṣad, 3, that those persons who commit suicide reach after death a world of intense darkness, named Asūrya-loka, is contained in his comment on Parāsara-smṛti, II, 32 (Vol. II, pt. i, p. 55, Islampūrkar's edn.). His defence is natural, in the Brāhmaṇa revival that synchronised with the foundation of Vijayanagar.

The holocaust following the death of Gāngeyadeva of Cedi at Prayāg in A.D. 1038 is mentioned in an inscription published in Epigraphia Indica, II, p. 3.

The sati of large numbers after the death of a ruler came to mark social distinction. "When Ajit Singh of Mārwār died in 1724, 64 women burnt themselves on his funeral pyre. When Rājā Budh Singh of Būndi was drowned, 84 women became sati" (Tod's Annals of Rājasthān, II, ed. Crooke, p. 837). "When Ranjit Singh of Lahore died, four queens and seven concubines ascended the funeral pyre. . . . Three women died with Mahārājā Kharag Singh, five with Basant Singh, eleven with Kis'ori Singh, twenty-four with Hīra Singh, and 310 with Sucet Singh." (Altekar, op. cit., p. 155).

155

53, ll. 13 to 54, 18. Treatment of Unchaste and Abducted or Outraged Women

Hindu law took a strict view of unchastity, when it was voluntary, whether in man or women. Apastamba imposes a deterrent punishment on the unfaithful husband, by ruling that his expiation is wearing the hide of a donkey for six months, and begging from door to door in that guise, everywhere announcing his offence, (I, 9, 18):

Dāravyatikramī kharājinam bahir-loma paridhāya dāravyatikramine bhikṣāmiti saptāgarāni caret. Sā vṛttiḥ ṣanmāsān.

The direction to wives to treat their husbands with meekness and forbearance is not coupled with any reduction of rigor in the treatment of an unchaste husband.

In the Vedic age, unchaste women were allowed to take part even in sacrifices after mere confession (Satapatha Brāhmana, II, 5, 2, 20). The leniency was continued by Vasiṣṭha (XXVIII, 2):

Svayam vipratipannā . . . na tyājyā!

Kautilya (p. 230) provides a punishment for a man who defiles the daughter of his own male or female slave, and makes the adulterer responsible for the payment of a suitable nuptial fee to enable the girl to be married. He also rules that when a man has sexual relation with a woman held as slave on account of money due from her, he has not only to be fined but to provide for her clothes and maintenance. According to Yājñavalkya, II, 290, a brāhmaṇa having intercourse with a slave woman, even though she is of lower caste, is to be punished. By a rule of Kātyāyana of general applicability, which is therefore applicable to adultery also, women should pay only half the fine that men should pay for the offence, and where the penalty is death in the case of men, women should be left off with mere mutilation. (v. 487 of Kane's edn.) The concession is on the score of the defenceless position of women, which calls for leniency.

The idea that the man is more to blame than the woman in such cases is also implicit in the $Mah\bar{a}bh\bar{a}rata$ (XIII, 58, 5) rule that in cases of adultery or rape between persons of the same caste, the woman should not be turned adrift $(ty\bar{a}jy\bar{a})$, unless she has conceived.

A wet-nurse (dhātrī) is placed by Nārada (XV, 73-75) in the same class as the mother, mother's sister, mother-in-law, maternal uncle's wife, paternal aunt, pupil, sister's female companion, daughter, preceptor's wife, a women of the same gotra, a suppliant woman, the queen, a female ascetic, and a chaste woman of the highest caste, as a person whose violation will constitute an inexpiable offence for which there is no punishment lower than the removal of the offending organ (cited by Aparārka, p. 857). The idea is that the abuse of a woman who has placed herself under protection is specially heinous. It is equated with incest.

The punishment for theft being death, and abduction of a woman being theft, it was punishable capitally. $Vy\bar{a}sa$ (cited in $Vyavah\bar{a}ramayikha$, p. 135) includes the theft of women in nine kinds of theft. The same smrti rules (ib. p. 236) that the abductor of a woman $(str\bar{\imath}-hart\bar{a})$ should be burnt in a raging fire bound to an iron bedstead:

Strī-hartā lohas ayane dagdhavyo vai kaṭāgninā |

In the $N\bar{a}radaparisista$ (28) it is ruled that the entire property of a man should be confiscated if he abducts a woman, and he should suffer death if he abducts a virgin girl:

Sarvasvam harato nārīm, kanyām tu harato vadhah!

The abduction of a married woman is held by Bṛhaspati to be a crime of violence $(s\bar{a}hasa)$ as well as theft, and Nārada (XVII, 6) holds it to be among the most heinous crimes.

The $\bar{a}tat\bar{a}yin$, the most culpable offender known, being usually a synonym for assassin, is classed with the committer of arson, the poisoner, the armed robber, and the violent robber of land and women. The punishment for the $\bar{a}tat\bar{a}yin$ is death, according to Manu, (VIII, 350) and Vasistha (III, 17), and he who slays him when caught red-handed can not be punished by the king, even if the culprit who has been slain is a learned Brāhmaṇa. Later on this was explained away as inoperative in the Kaliyuga in the case of Brāhmaṇas, though its applicability for offenders of other castes was conceded. By a rule of Kātyāyana (v. 830 ed. Kane) rape was to be punished by the king with death:

Strīṣū kṛtopabhogasyāt prasahya puruṣo yathā l Vadhe tatra pravarteta, kāryātikramaṇam hi tat ll

When tenderness for a Brāhmaṇa offender began to be shown by smartas the rule was made applicable only to non-Brāhmaṇas. (Vyavahara-mayūkha, p. 224 and Vīramitrodaya, p. 504.)

Unchastity, according to Manu (XI, 60) is an upa-pataka.

The expiation prescribed for it (ib. 118) is govrata and cāndrā-yaṇa. According to Manu (XI, 177-178) an unchaste wife should be merely confined to the house and made to undergo these penances; and by the general rule, already cited (infra p. 269 note) her penance will be half of what one of the male sex will have to perform.

A ravished woman is in result unchaste. But she must be maintained.

Kautilya deprives the habitually unchaste woman only of subsistence in excess of 2000 paṇas. (Trn. Shāma S'āstri, 1915, p. 199).

156

REHABILITATION OF ABDUCTED OR OUTRAGED WOMEN

Vasistha (XXVIII, 2-4):

"A wife, tainted by sin, whether quarrelsome or a voluntary run-away, or the victim of an outrage, or the victim of thieves, is not to be cast away $(n\bar{a}sti\ ty\bar{a}go)$. Let her courses be awaited for; by them she will become pure again." Atri holds that a woman who has been ravished by mlecchas and evil men $(p\bar{a}pakarmabhih)$ is rendered pure again by performing the $pr\bar{a}j\bar{a}patya$ penance and by her courses. (This verse occurs also in $Par\bar{a}sarasmrti$, X, 25).

Devala, who probably wrote about the time of the Musulman invasions of Sindh, rules that a woman, who has conceived through one of another varna (i.e., the abductor) is rendered pure either by miscarriage of the foetus (vinisṛte tatah salyā, rajaso vāpi dars'ane) or by giving away the child born of the conception, so that there might be (after her restoration) no mixture of castes (varnasam-karah.) (Devalasmṛti, in Smṛttīnam-samuccayah, Ānandās'rama ed. p. 87, vv. 47-52). This is in harmony with the principle enunciated by Yājñavalkya (I, 72) that 'in adultery, purification accrues from the recurrence of the courses, but not if there has been conception, and that in the latter case, the wife should be put away.' Vijñanes'vara shows the spirit of reaction against the lenient treatment of the woman, by explaining away the older rules in her favour as referring to 'mental adultery' (manovyabhicāra), and that where the father of the unborn child is a S'ūdra the woman must be cast away, in accordance with a rule of Manu (IX, 155). But, he shows some consideration to the unfortunate woman by laying down that by "casting away" (tyāga) all that is meant is that she should not be allowed to take part in the religious rites of the husband, as a chaste wife will be entitled to do, and that it is not intended that she should be driven out of the house, in which she may remain in confinement. (Tyagasca upa-bhoga-dharma-kāryayoḥ; na tu niṣkāsanam gṛhāt tasyāḥ, 'nirundhyāt eka vesmani' iti niyamāt).

The same stand is taken by Aparārka.: 'etacca mānasa vyabhicare, p. 98;' sambhoga-samsparsa-sambhāṣaṇa-sahādhikāra-viṣayas-tyāgah kāryah, na tu punar gṛhān-nirvasanānu-rūpah, p. 99.

The opinion of Caturvims atimatam is thus given in Nandapandita's commentary on Parās aras mṛti, X, 27:

Sūdra-garbhe bhavet-tyāgaḥ caṇḍālo jāyate yataḥ l Garbhasrāve dhātudoṣaiḥ caret-cāndrāyaṇatrayam ll and

Catasra eva santyājyāḥ patane satyapi striyāḥ |
Svapākopahatā yā tu bhartṛghnī pitṛ-putra-gā ||
(ed. Benares, pp. 311-2.)

157

54, 1. 8. AL-BIRUNI ON HINDU TREATMENT OF FALLEN WOMEN AND RETURNED CONVERTS

The remarks of Al-Biruni, who is anterior to the great smārtas of the twelfth century, relate to both the treatment of adulteresses and the Hindu, who having been enslaved by the Muhammadan conqueror, comes back to his country. He says (ed. Sachau, 1910, II, pp. 162-163):

"An adulteress is driven out of the house of the husband and banished.

I have repeatedly been told that when Hindu slaves (in Muslim countries) escape and return to their country and religion, the Hindus order that they should fast by way of expiation, then they bury them in dung, stale, and milk of cows for a number of days, till they get into a state of fermentation. Then they drag them out of the dirt, and give them similar dirt to eat; and more of the like.

I have asked the Brahmins if this is true, but they deny it, and maintain that there is no expiation possible for such an individual, and that he is never allowed to return to those conditions of life in which he was before he was carried off as a prisoner. And how should that be possible? If a Brahman eats in the house of a Sudra for sundry days, he is expelled from his caste and can never regain it."

The remarks of Al-Biruni show that the rules had hardened by his time, and that Apararka and Vijnanes'vara in explaining away the old considerate rules were only justifying current usage.

158

54, Il. 8-12. REHABILITATION OF THE CONVERTED HINDU

The locus classicus among smṛtis on the readmission of the patita (out-caste) is Devalasmṛti, which is devoted entirely to the enunciation of means of restoring by suitable penances such persons to their old place in Hindu society. It consists of about ninety verses. But the Devala who is quoted by the great commentators seems to have been another, or atleast, his work seems to have been mainly in prose. (Kane, op. cit., p. 121). That his rules, if they had been known in Al-Biruni's age were not operative in Hindu society is evident from Al-Biruni, (supra, Note 212.) In the fragment, which now passes as his, he states that the expiations prescribed by him alone are valid, and that the rules of other sages are invalid, if against him (verse 72).

The gist of his doctrine is that a person who had been carried away by mlecchas, and had contracted impurity by close association with them, in eating, living and even marriage, (which lead to loss of caste), can be restored to his old status by a bath in the Ganges and the performance of specified expiatory rites (prāyasc-citta). Such restoration can take place even if the person had been away for twenty years:

Gṛhīto yo balāt mlecchaiḥ pañca-ṣaṭ-sapta va samāḥ l Dasādi vimsatim yāvat tasya suddhir vidhīyate !!

The $Mit\bar{a}k\bar{s}ar\bar{a}$ has ruled that even if a person had been treated as civilly dead by the breaking of a pot, he can be taken back:

Caritavrata āyāte ninayerur-navam ghaṭam |

Jugupseran na cāpyenam samvaseyusca sarvas ah ||

(Cited in Dharma-pradīpa, p. 209).

The following verses of Yamasmṛti (V, 6-7) rule that persons who had been forced into slavery by mlecchas can be taken back after performing suitable prāyascitta:

Balāt dāsīkrtā yeca mleccha-cāṇḍāla-dasyubhiḥ l Asubham kāritāḥ karma gavādi-prāni-himsanam l Prāyascchittam ca dātavyam tāratamyena vā dvijaiḥ ll

159

54, 11. 13-26. TREATMENT OF VRĀTYA. S'IVĀJI'S EXPIATION AND CORONATION

The orthodox definition of a $vr\bar{a}tya$ is given in almost identical terms by Manu (II, 39-40) and Yājñavalkya, (I, 37-38). The maximum limit for the performance of upanayana for dvijas (twice-born castes) is 16, 22 and 24 respectively for the Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, and Vais'ya respectively; those who have not undergone such initiation in the $S\bar{a}vitri-mantra$ and their descendants are $vr\bar{a}tyas$ unless they are redeemed by the performance of the rite of $vr\bar{a}tyastoma$. The expiatory rites laid down for them by later writers include the $Udd\bar{a}laka-vrata$, and the concluding bath $(avabhrta-sn\bar{a}na)$ of the Asvamedha (horse) sacrifice (V. N. Mandlik's Trn. of $Y\bar{a}j\bar{n}avalkyasmrti$, 1880, p. 165, note 4). Manu proscribes even clandestine relations of dvijas with $vr\bar{a}tya$ women.

(VIII, 373). Neglect of sāvitrī will create new vrātyas (X, 21). Sacrificing for vrātyas is forbidden (XI, 198).

See Nāgoji Bhaṭṭa's Vrātya-prāyascittanīrṇaya and the Amber Mahārāja Jai Singh's Vrātya-prāyascitta-samgraha (Benares, 1927) for the attitude towards the rehabilitation of those who had become vrātyas among ruling dynasties in the Mughal period.

160

VRĀTYASTOMA

See Nagendranath Ghose, Indo-Aryan Literature and Cultural Origins (1934) for a new view of the Vrātyas as a highly cultured non-Aryan people of the North East India, responsible for early Upanisad thought and the origin of Buddhism. They are held to have followed an exotic cult and 'become Arvanised, and Brahmanised' (D. R. Bhandarkar, Some Aspects of Ancient Indian Culture, 1940, follows the line of thought developed by Mr. N. N. Ghosh). Mr. Ghosh points out that there were four kinds of $Vr\bar{a}tya$ -stoma (pp. 8-10) which may be classified as those of conversion, excommunication, and purification. The Aswamedha is regarded by Mr. Ghosh as a vrātya institution, which was superseded by the Brahmanical $R\bar{a}jas\bar{u}ya$ (pp. 128n, and 202n). Vasistha (XI, 76-79) lays down in regard to the reclamation of the vrātya that he might undergo one of the following: the Uddālaka penance, a kind of cāndrāyana, the Asvamedha, or the Vrātya-stoma. Unless the ceremonies are done, the vrātyas according to Vasistha (XI, should not have upanayana, Vedic instruction or sacrifice or intermarry with those who are still in caste. The question became important when Hindu Kings who claimed kṣatriya lineage, like S'ivāji, found that they were vrātyas, through omission of the upanayana, ceremony, which Sivāji underwent prior to his coronation, on the advice of Gagabhatta (Vis'ves'vara Bhatta of Benares, the nephew of the famous Kamalākara Bhatta) who received a fee of a lakh of hons for officiating at Sivāji's coronation (A.D. 1674). The official account of the coronation shows that the great Marātha ruler was made to follow strictly all the old rules laid for a Kṣatriya king's installation, after undergoing suddhi.

The fullest account of Sivāii's coronation is that in Malhar Rāmarāo Citnis, S'iva-cchatrapatice-caritra, ed. K. N. Sane, 1924, It is an almost contemporary document, and is based on reports of eye-witnesses and court officials. When S'ivāji decided on being crowned, precedents for the long discontinued coronation rites were diligently sought. Jai Singh of Jaipur had been crowned and had performed a jvotisthoma in Ujjain, and also a paundarīka vajīna. He was known to Sivāji, having brought him before the emperor, on a safe conduct, which was repudiated. Under the orders of Jai Singh an extensive digest of Dharmas āstra was compiled by Ratnākara in A. D. 1713 and named Jayasimha-kalpadruma (printed, 1925; vide Kane, History, p. 548). The procedure followed by the Rajput ruler was studied. But, it was deemed necessary to get a first-rate smārta from Benares, and Gāga Bhatta whose family originally belonged to Mahārāstra, was invited. As laid down in the sastras, a saptanga was appointed under the name of astapradhān so as to officiate at the ceremony. S'ivāji took an oath (pratijna) at the coronation: to restore the world which had been overrun by the Muhammadans $(Yavan\bar{a}kr\bar{a}nta)$ and re-establish the Hindu dharma and to govern in accordance with the Dharmas āstras (ib. para 274), as befits a descendant of the ancient Sesodia line (sisodiyā-kulānta utpanna ho-ūna kulabhūsana hotsāta kuladharma-sthābanā keli). That his vow was kept is shown by his ordering the arrest of Sambhāji, for outraging a woman, contrary to Dharma (ib. para, 282)

161

54, ll. 25-29. As'vamedha by Kings of Dubious Kṣatriya Lineage

After the epic times, the first instance of the performance of the horse-sacrifice (asvamedha) is that of Puşyamitra S'unga, who performed it twice in his reign (185-150 B.C.). Kharavela, the Jain king of Kalinga, performed the $R\bar{a}jas\bar{u}ya$ which has been regarded as even more significant than the Asvamedha, in 177 B.C. (R. D. Banerji History of Orissa, I, p. 91) S'ri S'ātakarni, the S'ātavāhana king, contemporary with Pusyamitra and Kharavela, performed also the Asvamedha twice, like his enemy, the great Sunga, whom he defeated in battle. Gautamiputra S'ātakarni claims to be 'the unique Brāhmana' and the destroyer of the pride of the Ksatriyas. (Banerji op. cit., p. 118.) In the year 24 of the Kusan era a stone post of the horse-sacrifice (asvamedha) was dedicated at Mathurā. "On this stone post Vāsiska is mentioned as the reigning emperor." (R. D. Banerji, History of Ancient India, p. 129). In the Nanaghat inscription the widowed queen Nayanikā, the consort of S'ātakarni I, mentioned above, claims to have performed (participated in?) many sacrifices such as the Rajasūya and Asvamedha (Archaelogical Survey of Western India, V, p. 82). In the Gupta dynasty, Samudragupta, Kumaragupta I, and the later Gupta, Adityasena (c. A.D. 650, V. A. Smith, Early History of India, ed. 1924, p. 332) claim to have performed the Asyvamedha. The Bharas'ivas are supposed to have performed at Benares 'ten horse sacrifices'. The Vākātaka King Pravasasena did a horse sacrifice (R.D. Banerji, Anct. Hist. of Ind., p. 1877). In the Dakhan, Pulakesin I (c. 550) (Fleet, in Bombay Gazetteer, I, i, p. 181) performed it. Towards the end of the seventh century, Madhyamarāja Yasobhīta of the S'ailodbhava dynasty (the name is significant of the origin of the family) of Orissa claims to have done an Asvamedha and a Vājapeya.

In South India, the early Pallava king Sivaskandavarman (according to the Hirahadgalli plates, Epig. Ind. VI, p. 88) claims to have performed the Agnistoma, Vājapeya and Asvamedha sacrifices. The reference in the Udayendiram plates to an Asvamedha by an unmentioned king in late Pallava times is noteworthy. (Gopalan, Pallavas, p. 125). The Kadamba king Mayūravarma (who, like Puṣyamitra was a Brāhmaṇa) claims to have done an Asvamedha. In the Cola records, there is reference to only one Asvamedha and that in Rājadhirāja's time (Nīlakantha S'āstri's Colas, II, p. 220) Kṛṣṇa Yādava, the grandfarther of Mahādeva, the patron of Hemādri, claims to have revived Vedic sacrifices.

162

56, Il. 5-6. NIBANDHAS ON DHARMAS'ĀSTRA BY KINGS

The great $bh\bar{a}syas$ are virtually nibandhas, as they collect in the course of their comments on their originals all the relevant authorities supporting the text, or apparently going against it. Aparārka's $bh\bar{a}sya$ on Yājñavalkya and Mādhava's commentary on Parās'ara are practically nibandhas. Ballāla Sena (A.D. c. 1168) composed, through or with the help of his guru Aniruddha, four digests named $s\bar{a}gara$, viz., $\bar{A}c\bar{a}ras\bar{a}gara$, $Pratisth\bar{a}s\bar{a}gara$, $D\bar{a}nas\bar{a}gara$, and $Adbutas\bar{a}gara$. The last two have been printed. (Kane, op. cit., pp. 340-341).

Pratāparudradeva of Orissa, who ruled at Kataka (Cuttack) from A.D. 1497-1532, is the reputed author of the digest Sarasvatīvilāsa, of which the Vyavahāra part has been published (Mysore, 1927).

163

56, l. 5. HEMĀDRI'S CATURVARGACINTĀMAŅI

"Hemādri and Mādhava are the Castor and Pollux in the galaxy of dākṣinātya writers on Dharmas'āstra" says Mr. Kane (op. cit., p. 354). He held the post of Karanādhisvara (Keeper of Records) of Mahādeva, the Yādava king of Devagiri (Daulatabad) in the Dakhan. His modest title disguises, as in the case of the famous Nāna Fadnavīs, the position of virtual premier. His Caturvargacintāmani aimed at being an encyclopaedia of Dharma, and was designed to consist of five major sections, viz. vrata, dāna, tīrtha, mokṣa and paris'eṣa. The sections on tīrtha and mokṣā have yet to come to light. (Kane, p. 354). King Mahādeva under whose command Hemādri wrote his digest, reigned from A.D. 1260 to 1270.

164

56, Il. JAYASIMHAKALPADRUMA

See Note 217 on S'īvāji's coronation, ante pp. 281-285. This extensive work is in 19 stabakas on kāla, vrata, s'rāddha, etc. Composed about A.D. 1710 (vide, Kane, p. 548).

165

56, U. 17-18. SMALL CONTENT OF POLITICS AND LAW IN NIBANDHAS WRITTEN BY COMMAND

There is nothing on polity in Hemādri's digest, and it makes only occasional excursions into the domain of $vyavah\bar{a}ra$ e.g., on sources of ownership (III, i, p. 525 ff.), $str\bar{\imath}dhana$, (III, i, pp. 530-531). These are his only digressions into law proper. In the bigger nibandhas, $vyavah\bar{a}ra$ and $r\bar{a}jadharma$ were only part of the bigger scheme. Two parts only are devoted to these in Nilakanṭha's digest out of the twelve, and two out of fourteen in Lakṣmidhara's Krtya-kalpataru. In Caṇḍes'vara's $Ratn\bar{a}kara$, the treatment of $R\bar{a}jan\bar{\imath}ti$ was an after-thought, and $vyav\bar{a}hara$ and $viv\bar{a}da$ (law and procedure) were two sections in seven. In Smrticandrika, $vyavah\bar{a}ra$ was one of its six divisions, though now its best known; the others dealt with $samsk\bar{a}ra$, $\bar{a}hnika$, $sr\bar{a}ddha$, asauca, and $pr\bar{a}yscitta$. The $Madanaratna-prad\bar{\imath}pa$ had no section on $R\bar{a}jan\bar{\imath}ti$ and its $vyavah\bar{a}ra$ section was only one of seven. Other instances can be cited.

166

56, 11. 19-21. THE CHARACTER OF RĀJANĪTI IN NIBANDHA LITERATURE

The only works on $R\bar{a}jadharma$ or $R\bar{a}jan\bar{\imath}ti$ now extant, which form part of a nibandha are (1) Lakṣmīdhara's $R\bar{a}jadharma-kalpataru$, c. A.D. 1110, (2) Caṇḍes'vara's $R\bar{a}jan\bar{\imath}tiratn\bar{a}kara$, c. A.D. 1370, (3) $R\bar{a}jan\bar{\imath}tiprak\bar{a}s'a$ of Mitramis'ra, c. 1620, (4) $N\bar{\imath}timay\bar{\imath}kha$ of Bhaṭṭa Nīlakanṭha, c. 1635 and (5) $R\bar{a}jadharma-kaustubha$ of Anantadeva, c. 1675. Among the parts on $R\bar{a}ja-dharma$ in old digests which are lost must be mentioned king Bhoja's $R\bar{a}jan\bar{\imath}ti$ (A.D. 1000-1050, mentioned by Kane, op.cit., p. 719) and $R\bar{a}jadharma-k\bar{a}madhenu$ of Gopāla a contemporary of Lakṣmīdharma as mentioned by the latter (Kane, p. 612; cited by Caṇḍes'vara on pp. 2 and 4 of his $R\bar{a}jan\bar{\imath}tiratn\bar{a}kara$, ed. Jayaswal, 1936).

167

56, l. 23. KAUŢILYA'S ARTHAS'ĀSTRA

A vast literature has grown round the Kauţilīya. For a discussion of the authenticity, character and place of the Kauţilīya in political thought see my Ancient Indian Polity, 2nd edition, 1935, and my Ancient Indian Economic Thought, 1934 passim.

168

56, l. 25. Bhoja's Yuktikalpataru

This has been edited by Pandit Īs'varacandra S'āstri, Calcutta, 1917. The topics it deals with are, besides polity, selection of sites for buildings and construction of buildings, furniture-making, precious stones, ornaments, weapons, draught and other animals, vehicles and the building of ships etc. Bhoja has written on Vāstus'āstra in his Samarāngansūtra (ed. Gaṇapati S'āstri, G. O. S.). The miscellaneous character of the topics in the work, and the citation of Bhoja himself by name six times may justify the suspicion that it has been fathered on the famous king of Dhāra. The polity part is of poor quality.

169

56, 1. 25. Mānasollāsa of Somes'vara Cālukya

The Mānasollāsa is an encyclopaedic work in 100 chapters, divided into five vimsatis, and comprising about 8000 slokas in anustubh metre. It gives a condensed account of many topics. The first two vimsatis, which have been printed both at Mysore and Baroda, deal with politics chiefly, dealt with in a very free spirit, so as to bring in medical treatment, horses, elephants, precious stones and alchemy. There is little originality. An account of tīrthas (places of pilgrimage) comes early in the work, on the ground that tīrthasnāna is imperative for a king, and the holy rivers of the Dakhan within the author's dominions are specifically mentioned. The author is Somes'vara, the son and successor of Vikramāditya VI. His reign extended from A.D. 1127 to 1138, its shortness being due to the great age to which Vikramāditya lived. It was composed in A.D. 1131 (Mr. G. K. Shrigondekar's introduction to the Baroda edn. p. vi).

170

56, U. 29-30. Kāmandaka, Somadeva-Sūri and Hemacandra

All the three writers make a display of their learning and literary skill, literary effect being more their obvious aim than originality in idea or in presentation of political views. The Nitisāra of Kāmandaka is an obvious imitation of Kautilya's work but its administrative, legal and economic material is rejected, and attention is concentrated on such minor matters of king-craft as the mandalas and diplomacy. The treatment betrays unfamiliarity with actual government. Somadeva-Sūri was a Jain teacher (c. A.D. 950). His work is in simple, readable prose of great elegance. It is chiefly a rehash of some portions of Kautilya's work, whose phrases are woven into the texture of Somadeva's own sentences. It has been printed at Bombay with a baffling commentary, which contains many forged texts.

For analysis of the contents of the Nītisāra and the Nītivākyāmṛta, see—Benoy Kumar Sarkar's Introduction to Hindu Positivism, 1937, pp. 381 ff., and pp. 420 ff.

Hemacandra is another Jain writer, and a polyhistor. He lived between A.D. 1089 and 1173 under the patronage of his disciple Kumārapāla Cālukya, (A.D. 1143-1172) king of Anhilvād His Laghu-arhan-nīti was printed in 1906. For an analysis of its contents see Sarkar, op. cit., p. 430.

See note 28 supra.

171

57, Il. 1-4. Rājadharma Works by Court Pandits.

Nilakantha wrote under the patronage of Bhagavanta Singh of Bhareha, near the junction of the Jumna and the Cambal (Carmanvati). Bhagavanta was a Bundela chief of the Sengara clan. The digest was named after the patron as $Bhagavanta-bh\bar{a}skara$. As the work was named $Bh\bar{a}skara$ 'the Sun,' each section was called a ray of the Sun $(May\bar{u}kha)$. The division into twelve sections was perhaps suggested by the number of \bar{A} dityas being twelve, (see P. V. Kane's ed. of the $Vyavah\bar{a}ra-may\bar{u}kha$, 1926, Introduction, p. xvii).

Mitramis'ra, the author of Vīramitrodaya, was an āsrita of the famous Bīr Singh of Orccha, who ruled from 1605-1627, and was coeval with his patron Jahāngir, for whose sake he assassinated Abul Fazl, in 1602 (Vincent Smith. Akbar, 1917, p. 305). Jahāngir promoted Bīr Singh when he came to the throne and showed him so much consideration that Bīr Singh was promoted to a mansab of 3000 (see my ed. of F. Gladwin's History of Jahāngir, 1930, p. 23). He was also permitted to fortify Datia and Orccha, rebuild the famous temple of Kṛṣṇa at Mathura, and build many other temples. His revivalist zeal for Hinduism is responsible for the patronage of Mitramis'ra whose digest combines in its title his own name coupled as 'friend' with that of his patron.

Anantadeva the author of Rājadharmakaustubha wrote under the patronage of Baz Bahadur of Almora (1662-1675). See Kane's History of Dharmas āstra, pp. 452-453.

172

57, 11. 11-31. LAKSMIDHARA AND THE KRTYAKALPATARU

The relevant information on Laksmidhara and his great digest and a consideration of its place in the history of Dharmas āstra is collected in my articles on Laksmidhara on pp. 148-168 and 199-223 of the Madras Law Journal Commemoration Volume, 1941. The question of the alleged citation of Vijñānes vara by Laksmidhara, to which currency has been given by the high authority of Mr. Kane, who brought it into notice (History of Dharmas āstra, pp. 289, 317), is examined and it is shown that the position can not be sustained. The dates of the composition of the Mitākṣarā and the Kalpataru are determined as c. 1120 and 1110 respectively, in modification of the dates given by Mr. Kane, who places the Kalpataru long after the $Mit\bar{a}k\bar{s}ar\bar{a}$. Incidentally, from the Kalpataru confirmatory evidence of the author of the $K\bar{a}madhenu$ being Gopāla, as suggested by Mr. Kane (pp. 294-296), is given, and he is shown to have been a contemporary and friend (vayasyah) of Lakṣmidhara.

173

58, 11. 1-6. Candes'vara

Mr. Kane in his History (pp. 370-372) and Dr. Jayaswal in his introduction to the $R\bar{a}jan\bar{\imath}tiratn\bar{a}kara$ (pp. 12-22) have given the available information about the personal and family history of Candes'vara, who, while liberally "borrowing" from his predecessors, particularly Lakṣmīdhara, to whom he is inferior in ability and erudition, claims superiority over them:

Yasmin-na kiñcidapi s'amsati Kamadhenur-Yatrestamalpamapi Kalpatarurna datte | Dhatte na gandhamapi kancana Pārijātaḥ Tat-sarvamapi vivinakti nayapravīṇah ||

(Candes vara's preface, sl. 25 to Kṛtyaratnākara, Bib. Ind., 1925, p. 6).

174

58, ll. 16-32. Nītimayūkha

The paramount authority which his $Vyavah\bar{a}ramay\bar{u}kha$ has attained through judicial decisions in the Bombay Presidency has invested all the other sections of the Bhagavanta-bhāskara with a reputation, which is somewhat unmerited. This is particularly the case with his $Nitimay\bar{u}kha$. It is a pedantic work. Its main reliance is on Varahamihira's $Brhatsamhit\bar{u}$ and the $Nitis\bar{u}ra$ of $K\bar{a}mandaka$. Like other writers after the Musulman conquest, he recommends $k\bar{u}ta$ -yuddha and the use of poisoned weapons, destruction of the civil population etc. To show his want of realism, Mr. B. K.

Sarkar has pointed out that Nilakantha's authorities are of the Gupta period (op. cit., p. 547).

175

59, line 1. Non-Ksatriya Coronation

At the beginning of the Nitimayūkha, Nīlakantha declares that the term Rājā is valid (sakto) only in regard to the Kṣatriya (Kṣatriya-mātro) and is not a result of assumption of a kingship ($R\bar{a}jya$ -yoga). He argues that as kingship ($r\bar{a}jya$) follows coronation, and it is laid down that the $R\bar{a}j\bar{a}$ should be crowned ($R\bar{a}j\bar{a}nam$ abhisincet) which can only mean the Ksatriya. There seems here a tacit assumption that what he says in the book is applicable only to Ksatriva kings but the tenor shows that he was more of a realist than might appear from this initial argument. He describes the Vedic ceremony of coronation with vedic rites, (abhiseka-vidhih, and abhiseka-brayogah) which take up nearly two-fifths of the short treatise. It is noteworthy that the more rigid Laksmidhara, who. though a courtier, unlike Nīlakantha who was a mere scholar, has omitted the Vedic rites and the full mantras from the Aitarevabrāhmana in Rūjadharma-Kalþataru, and given only three pages to the coronation.

176

59, U. KILLING A BRAHMAN IN SELF-DEFENCE

The subject is discussed in pp. 91-100 (Gujarāthi Press ed. 1921). He quotes Manusmṛti, VIII, 350-351, that 'one may slay without hesitation an assassin who approaches him with murderous intent, even if he be his own teacher, a minor, an aged man, or a Brāhmaṇa versed in the Veda, and by killing an assassin the slayer incurs no guilt,' and Kātyāyana (a verse not found in Mr. Kane's reconstruction of this jurist) that 'by slaying in battle one who approaches the slayer with murderous intent and attacks him the killer incurs no guilt accruing to the slayer of a Brahmana,' Nīlakanṭha argues that the rules refer only to one who actually attacks and should not apply to a possible slaver who is asleen (ato jighāmsata eva viprasya maranam, na suptādeh) and that the use of the words "or" $(v\bar{a})$ in Manu's dictum and even' (api) in Kātyāyana's, shows that the killing of a Brāhmana in such circumstances is not acceptable. Vijñānes'vara, in commenting on Yājñavalkva (II, 21,) by way of llustration discusses this injunction of Manu. The argument is that the words used do not constitute a vidhi (command) to the effect that a guru and others must be killed, but imply that if even the slaving of a guru, who is entitled to reverence and filial affection, an old man and a child, who are objects of compassion are liable to be slain, in in such circumstances, how about others not possessing such claims to consideration—even if they approach as assassins (ātatāvinah)? The argument of the Mitāksara, which Nīlakantha accepts, is further that there would be a conflict between precepts if the meaning is that such atatayins (a guru etc.) should be killed; for Sumantu has ruled that though an assassin (ātatāyin) can be killed, without guilt accruing to the slayer, it is otherwise with the killing of a Brāhmaņa or a cow. There is also the injunction of Manu (IV, 162) that the teacher who initiates one, the teacher who has explained to him the Vedas, or any other teacher, and parents should never be troubled (na himsyat), as they are all inoffensive (tapasvi) persons. There will be also transgression of the Vedic injunction that one should not injure any living being (Na himsyāt sarvāņi bhūtāni) which is a general interdict against all killing. The significance of the mention of the guru and others in the verses of Manu is that they alone should not be killed. concluded by Vijñānes'vara, who is following Medhātithi here, that the rule of Manu about atatayins will apply only to those who are not Brāhmanas.

Aparārka holds that a Brāhmaṇa ātatāyin may be slain only when he is about to kill another, or is attempting to kill another; i.e., he can be slain when caught in the very act of murdering another. If he escapes, he can not be killed later. He also holds that if it is possible to prevent the murder short of killing the murderer (ātatāyin) to kill the latter will result in the guilt of brahmahatyā (Brahman-slaughter). His opinion applies to ātatāyins of all castes. Medhātithi was of opinion that a murderer could be killed even after the commission of the crime, provided he is not a Brāhmaṇa, etc. Vijñānes'vara held that a Brāhmaṇa or Guru ātatāyin should be punished short of death, by suitable penances etc.

The Smṛṭicandrikā (Vyavahāra) dealing with the question applies the extension given, by parity of guilt, to the term ātatāyin by the smṛṭis (e.g., Vasiṣṭha, III, 16 who lays down that the following six are also ātatāyins: an incendiary, a poisoner, an armed attacker, a robber of wealth, a man who ravishes another man's wife, and he who takes away a man's field; or Bhṛgu, who adds to the above list the man who curses, who uses incantations, who is an informer, and one who always picks up the weak points of others.) The conclusions of the Smṛṭicandrikā are threefold:

- 1. All ātatāyins, including a Brāhmaṇa ātatāyin may be killed when they attempt assassination.
- 2. With the exception of the Brāhmaṇa, constructive ātatāyins like those who rob one of his field, or ravish another's wife, etc. may also be killed.
- 3. The Brāhmaṇa is not to be killed for the constructive offence of ātatāyin, as explained by Bhṛgu and Vasiṣṭha.

In his Nītimayūkha Nilakanṭha accepted all the three propositions, going thereby against the total exemption of the Brāhmaṇa by Vijñānes'vara and Medhātithi. But, in his Vyavahāramayūkha, he went back on this total acceptance of the three rules laid down by Smṛticandrikā, and argued that in no circumstances should the Brāhmaṇa be killed, as the rules in Manu etc., referred to other ages than Kaliyuga. His conclusion is that 'in the Kaliyuga a Brāhmaṇa ātatāyin is not to be killed (even in self-defence), but in other ages this was allowed.' (See Kane's notes to his edn. of Vyavahāramayūkha, 1926, pp. 417-422; and his Trn. of the same work, 1933, pp. 262-263, and particularly the notes.)

177

59, Il. 4-9. Kūţa-YUDDHA

 $K\bar{u}ta$ -yuddha is described by Nilakantha ($Nitimay\bar{u}kha$, p. 98) as slaying by the use of poisoned weapons and so forth. He cites the recommendation of $K\bar{a}$ mandaka to carry on $k\bar{u}ta$ -yuddha as an alternative ($pary\bar{u}ya$) or addition to open warfare. But the instances of 'unfair' attacks, which he gives may be unchivalrous, but are milder than those in use today among the nations of the West.

178

59, Il. 8-26. Anantadeva's Doctrines

See Dr. B. Bhattacarya's Introduction to the $R\bar{a}ja$ -dharma-Kaustubha, passim and especially,

p. xiv, chief queen and her accomplishments;

p. xiv, "If the king has several queens, then the eldest son, although born of a younger queen, inherits to the exclusion of other sons by older queens." Thus, primogeniture is laid down.

pp. xiv and xv, constitution of the ministry.

pp. xv-xviii coronation ceremony.

179

60-61, 11. 1-7. MITRAMIS'RA'S VIEWS

His view on the question of the qualification of the king is stated in $R\bar{a}jan\bar{\imath}tiprak\bar{a}s'a$ (pp. 10-11) in the following words:

Rājas abdārthaḥ tāvad vicāryate. Kim ayam rājas abdo Yasmin kasmims cit prajā-pālake vartate, uta kṣatriyajātau, kim vā abhiṣikta-kṣatriyajātau varttata iti? Tatra aveṣṭyadhikaraṇe "Rājā Rājasūyena svārājya-kāmo yajeta" ityatra pūrvapakṣe likhitam—

Rājyasyakartā rājeti sarvalokeşu gīyate | Mahāviṣayatā caivam s'āstrasyāpi bhaviṣyati ||

Tasmād brāhmaṇādayo rājyam kurvāṇā rājāna iti.

Rājyam tu janapada-paripālanam. Lokaprayoga eva sabdārthūvadhāraņe pramāṇam. Loke ca brāhmanādiṣu rājyakartṛṣu rājasabdo vartate.

Yāskopi, 'Rāja rājate' iti bruvan, yaugikam rājas abadam, is vara-vacanameva abhyupaiti. Rājānotkar sas ca prajā-paribālanā-direva.

Vedepi. "Somo asmākam brāhmaṇānām rājā," "Yo rāja varṣaṇīnām," "Somo vai rājā gandharveṣu" ityādau api, īs'vara-vacana eva pratīyate.

Kose api, "Rāja tu praņatāseļa-sāmantas-syāt"

On primogeniture his views are given in pp. 35-38. He cites Manu in favor of the heritage going to the eldest son, and the express injunction of the $K\bar{a}lik\bar{a}purana$:

Athoparicaram rājā yauvarājye abhyaṣecayet |
Jyāyāmsam aurasam putram sarvarājaguṇairyutam || and the address of Dasaratha to Rāma in the Rāmāyaṇa:

Adisto hyasi me jyestah prasūtah sadrso gunaih I

Tasmāt tvam pusyayogena yauvarājayam avāpsyasi ||

He lays down that a regal heritage should not be divided like a private estate: putrebhyo rājyam vibhajya na deyam (p. 39).

The State's liability to make good stolen property is limited. After citing Yājñavalkya's injunction that stolen property should be made good by the king (II, 36), Mitramis'ra adds (p. 127) the comment that what is lost through the theft of the servants of the owner need not be made good. (Yattu dhanasvāmina eva paricārkair-nītam tattu rājñā na devam.)

Mitramis'ra's treatment of the Mandala doctrine. See chapter 30, pp. 320-321.

THE BRAHMANA PERMITTED TO BE A SOLDIER

The following half-verse from the $Mah\bar{a}bh\bar{a}rata$ shows that every one is bound to fight for his country, if ordered to do so by the king, and that the Brāhmaṇa particularly should obey the mandate:

Rājāam niyogāt yoddhavyam brāhmanena visesatah

Duties of a conqueror

The rules from the smrtis are summarised by Mitramis'ra on pp. 409-413. The main features of the rules are that the old royal family, which has been defeated, should be restored, that private looting should be forbidden, that all spoils should be brought to the king, who will reward his soldiers as he deems fit, that if the former king is killed, one of the family should be crowned, that the conquered kingdom should not be destroyed (i.e., annexed):

Duştasyāpi narendrasya tad-rāṣṭram na vinās ayet (p. 411) and that the laws and usages of the conquered country should be respected and reinforced. (p. 411). The victor should conciliate the conquered people.

Obviously, these precepts if accepted by the Mughal conquerors would be beneficial to the Hindu population.

180

61, ll. 8-12. Candes'vara and Larsmidhara

Candes'vara is a wholesale borrower of Lakṣmīdhara's Kṛṭya-kalpataru, and practically every section of his Ratnākara series is built on the corresponding section of the Kalpataru. I am illustrating it in my edition of the Kalpataru. But he has not borrowed from Lakṣmīdhara in the Rājanīti-ratnākara. The circumstance that it was composed when he was over eighty will explain its slim size, as compared with the bulkier seven sections of the original Ratnākara, and also his omission to make more use of Lakṣmīdhara's work. There are only six citations of Lakṣmīdhara by name (pp. 16, 20, 37, 70, 72, 73) in the Rājanīti-ratnākara besides a phrase from Nītikalpataru i.e., Rājadharma-kalpataru.

. NOTES 211

181

61, U. 14-17. King's Propitiation of Unseen Powers

Laksmidhara's Rājadharmakalpataru contains many directions of a detailed character on the need to propitiate unseen powers and the ways of doing so. As a srotriva he must have believed in their efficacy, and felt a special competence to advise his king on the subject. That the calamities of the Musalman invasions in the eleventh and the twelfth centuries of the Christian era turned the eyes of the orthodox Hindus to such magical rites is illustrated not only by the space given to them in the Kalpataru but by the still fuller use made of such spells and ritual in the works of his very much younger contemporary Ballālasena, whose Dānasāgara for instance gives the ritual and mantras in extenso. It may be noted that Ballālasena wrote a special work on portents (Adbhuta), viz. Adbhuta-sāgara, which was printed in 1905. This work was commenced in A.D. 1068 and was left incomplete by Ballalasena, and completed by Laksmanasena. All Ballālsena's works were written with the help of his guru Aniruddha, the author of Pitrdayitā and Hāralatā.

182

61, 1. 19. Caste of Candes'vara's Master. The Brähmana as King

The Karnāṭa dynasty of Mithila, which had been ruling there from the last quarter of the eleventh century, when it became independent under Nānyadeva, came to an end in 1324, when Harisimhadeva retired to Simraongarh in Nepal after defeat by Ghiyāzud-din Tughlāk (Ind. Ant., 1884, p. 414). Caṇḍes'vara, like his father and grandfather, had been a Minister under this king. Caṇḍes'vara must have succeeded to the ministership by 1310, as in 1314 he performed a Tulāpuruṣadāna himself (Intrn. to Dānaratnākara, MS. in B.O.R. Institute, Poona). After the withdrawal of Harisimhadeva to Nepal, a new dynasty founded by the Rājaguru or Spiritual Preceptor of the old dynasty established itself in Mithila under the suzerainty of the emperor of Delhi. The founder of the new kingdom was Kāmes'a or Bhaves'a, who commissioned Candes'vara to compose the $R\bar{a}janti-ratn\bar{a}kara$. Bhaves'a was a Brāhmaṇa, as a Rājaguru, and Brāhamaṇas are interdicted from being kings. That Puṣyamitra the S'unga king, did so made him a degraded "Ārya" (Ānārya) to the Brahmaṇa poet Bāṇa, who condemned the act in the seventh century. (Trn. of Harşacarita, Cowell and Thomas, p. 194).

The King's duty was to fight. A Brāhmaņa was interdicted from bearing arms, except in very abnormal circumstances. Apastamba laid down that a Brahmana should not touch weapons even for mere examination (Pariksarthamabi brahmana ayudham nādadīta, 1, 10, 29, 6). Baudhāyana, against the specific prohibition of it by Gautama (to which he refers) allows a Brāhmana to to take up the vṛtti of a Ksatriya if he is not able to maintain himself by teaching, sacrificing and receipt of gifts, but limits it to cases in which society is distressed by the spoliation of Brāhmanas and ill-treatment of cows and castes get mixed up (varnānām api samkare.)—(II, ii, 4, 16-18) In the same spirit the Mahābhārata (XII, 78, 12-36) allows the Brāhmana to take up arms in defence of the subjects of a kingdom attacked by dasyus, on the failure of Ksatriyas. Manu (VIII, 349-350) in the same spirit allowed the Brāhmaņa to take up arms in defence of Brāhmaņas, women and Dharma.

That, on a loose interpretation of the permission to the Brāhmaṇa to live by the pursuit of arms, a large number became atleast candidates for recruitment to the army in the days of Kauṭilya, is inferrable from a discussion of the merits of a Brāhmaṇa as a soldier. (Arthas āstra, p. 343). But there is nowhere any permission to a Brāhmaṇa to become king. The passages in Manusmṛti (I, 98-101) exalting the Brāhmaṇa in the social scale have been wrongly interpreted by Dr. Jayaswal as sanction to the Brāhmaṇa to exercise sovereignty. (Manu and Yājnavalkya, pp. 102-104). Throughout India's history in the very rare instances of a Brāhmaṇa becoming a king, he has had either to abandon his varna and become a Kṣatriya, as did Mayūra, the first king of the Kadamba dynasty (J. F. Fleet, Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts, in Bombay Gazetter, I, i, p. 286) or apologise for the act. Orthodox opinion was more outraged by Brāhmaṇa kingship than by Vais'ya or S'ūdra sovereignty.

183

61, U. 21-22. RECOGNITION OF THE KING defacto

Caṇḍes'vara (Rājanītiratnākara, pp. 2-3) discussing the question of who is king, states that consecration is a consequence and not a cause of kingship (Prāja-svāmitve rājatve prasiddho rāja prāja-pālanavṛtti-abhiṣekādayah asya kāraṇamātram,) and accepts the same view as Kullūka that the word Rājā is not restricted to Kṣatriyas (Manusmṛti-vyākhyā, VII, 1)—"Rājas abdopi nātra kṣatriyaparaḥ." In classifying rulers from Samrāt to Tributary (Karadah) he adopts the view that all are entitled to the title Rājā, and the Dharma applicable to Rājās would apply to all of them equally: "Sakala-rājebhyo yaḥ karagrāhī sa Samrāt; Samrāje karado yaḥ sa Sakarah; svecchayā karado Akaraḥ. Smṛttādau api Rājattvena prakhyātaḥ. Loke tu, Rājeti Sakaraḥ, Cakravartī, Samrāt, Adhīsvaro, Mahārajā iti prasiddhāh, viseṣapratipatyuparodhāt. Parantu, trayāṇām api Dharmas-samameve." (Rājanītiratnākara, p. 4).

184

61, ll. 22-26. The State's Obligations to the Poor

Rājadhane dīna-anātha-ādi-sakala-prāninām ams itvam; bahunāyakatvāt rājya-vinās asca iti yuktih iti Gopāla-Laksmīdhara-Srikarādayah. (ibid., p. 72).

185

61, U. 27-28. Burke's Definition of Society

This occurs in the Reflections on the French Revolution. "Society is indeed a contract. Subordinate contracts for objects of mere occasional interest may be dissolved at pleasure—but the State ought not to be considered as nothing better than a partnership in pepper and coffee, calico or tobacco, or some other such low concern, to be taken up for a little temporary interest, and to be dissolved by the fancy of the parties. It is to be looked on with other reverence; because it is not a partnership in things subservient only to the gross animal existence of a temporary and perishable nature. It is a partnership in all science; a partnership in all art; a partnership in every virtue, and in all perfection. As the ends of such a partnership can not be obtained in many generations, it becomes a partnership not only between those who are living, but between those who are living, those who are dead, and those who are to be born. Each contract of each particular state is but a clause in the great primeval contract of eternal society, linking the lower with the higher natures, connecting the visible with the invisible world, according to a fixed compact sanctioned by the inviolable oath which holds all physical and all moral natures in their appointed place. This law is not subject to the will of those who by an obligation above them, and infinitely superior, are bound to submit their will to that law." (cited in J. Mac Cunn, Political Philosophy of Burke, 1913, pp. 59-60.) The view of Burke very closely approximates to the Hindu view of the eternal social order, as I have pointed out in previous works of mine.

186

61, U. 30-31. DIVINITY OF THE PEOPLE (PRAJĀĻ)

The idea of the king's divinity is enshrined in the identification of the king with Viṣṇu. The same idea applied to the subject $(Praj\bar{a})$ invests the latter with divinity and inviolability. Thus, in the $Mah\bar{a}bh\bar{a}rata$, Sāntiparva, 59, 106, it is said in the coronation oath that the people of the country (bhauma) are God (Brahma) and that in protecting the people the king is serving God:

Pratijnām ca abhirohasva manasā karmaņā girā |
'Palayiṣyāmyaham bhaumam Brahma' styeva ca-asakrt ||

The passage cited by Candes'vara ends thus:

'Adyārabhya na me rājyam; rāja ayam rakṣatu þrajāh' liti sarvam Prajā-Viṣṇum sāksiṇam srāvayed-muhuh ||

187

62, l. 6. Composition of the Rājanītiratnākara by Royal Command

Candes'vara states expressly in the second verse of the introduction to the $R\bar{a}jan\bar{\imath}tiratn\bar{a}kara$ that he composed it by command of King Bhaves'a:

Rajnā Bhavesena ājnapto Rājanīti-nibandhakam \
Tanoti Mantrinām āryah srīmān Candesvarah kritī ||

Dr. K. P. Jayaswal ($R\bar{a}jan\bar{\imath}tiratn\bar{a}kara$, Introduction, p. 23) shows that Bhaves'a was otherwise known as Bhavasimha, and that he was the younger brother Kames'a or Kames'vara, of the family of the $R\bar{a}jaguru$ of the Karnāṭa dynasty of Mithila, who was set up as king in place of the old line, by the Delhi emperor, about A.D. 1370. Caṇḍes'vara must then have been eighty-five. "Evidently he enjoyed a long life like his grandfather Devāditya. This record for old age and mental vigour is repeated in his family by Vidyāpati who lived under successive sovereigns of the dynasty of Bhaves'a." (ib., p. 25).

188 (See Note 81)

THE PRINCIPLE OF SUBSTITUTION IN MIMAMSA (Pratinidhi)

The matter is argued in Jaimini-sūtras, VI, iii, 13-41. The $p\bar{u}rvapakṣa$ is stated in $s\bar{u}tra$ 13 that in the absence of the prescribed material no other should be used as a substitute. The reply of Jaimini is that the command being general does not interdict the use of the substitute, i.e. the command is in regard to the performance of the sacrifice $(Y\bar{a}ga)$ and not its material. Sometimes the Veda indicates the substitute. But there can be no substitute for the deity invoked in a sacrifice, the fire, the mantra, and the act. $(s\bar{u}tra\ 18)$ nor should there be a substitute for any material expressly forbidden $(s\bar{u}tra\ 20)$. In regard to the attainment of the fruit of the sacrifice (phala) there cannot be a substitute for the $yajam\bar{a}na$. $(s\bar{u}tras, 9, 21.)$ Where a number of persons are engaged in a sacrifice and one of them is missing or incapacitated a substitute can be used (22). But the substitute is only a servant so far as the fruit is concerned (26). When any material is lost or unavailable, anything of the same class can be used (27). It is unreasonable not use a substitute (30). In the Veda it is laid down that if Soma is not available $p\bar{u}tik\bar{a}$ (a plant resembling Soma) may be used:

Yadisomamavindeta pūtikānabhişunuyāt |

If a substitute is lost, it should be replaced by an article resembling not itself but the original (32). If the principal (mukhya) becomes available, after the substitute is used, the former should be used, as the substitute is only to act for it, in its absence (35). This may be done even in the middle of a sacrifice (36). Sometimes the substitute may be more efficacious than the prescribed original, and in such a case can the substitute alone should be used, since the object is more important than the article to be used as prescribed? (39-40). Jaimini replies that it should not. (41).

189

A Woman's Independent Right to Perform a Sacrifice (To be read with Note 130.)

In $M\bar{\imath}m\bar{\alpha}msas\bar{\imath}tra$ (VI, i, 17) it is laid down that the husband and the wife possessed of wealth are entitled to perform the same sacrifice. (Svavatostu vacanādaikakāmyam syāt) depending on the Vedic injunction:

Dharme ca arthe ca kāme ca anaticaritavyā!

Sahadharmas caritavyah. Sahāpatyam utpādayitavyam ll "She should not be discarded in religious affairs, business and desired objects; all religious acts should be performed together; children should be brought forth together." (M. L. Sandal's Trn, p. 303).

INDEX

A	PAGE
	Altekar, Dr. A. S. —on Rāstra-
PAGE	kūta administration 143;
ABHISEKA 35	on upanayana for women
Abul Fazl 41, 203	165-6; 169
$\bar{A}c\bar{a}ra$ 16, 23;	status of women 171; 173, practice of good men in ac-	180, 184, 187, 188, 189
cord with vedic injunc-	Altindischen Rechts Schriftion 31; 55, 158	10/1
Ācārādars'a 129
Ācārasāgara 199	130, 200, 203, 208 Anarchy, Horror of 102
Ācārendu of Nārāyaņa 88
Adbhutasāgara 199, 211	0,110 01
Adharma 35, 94	(see Arājatā)
Ādityasena 198	Ancient India (Rapson) 86, 115, 124
Adoption 98
as a fiction in law 111; 170	of 67
uuisiu
AUDUNU	Thought 68, 78, 107, 171,
āgama 156	201
Ahalyā Bai Holkar 88	Ancient Indian Polity, 68, 76,
Ahalyā-kāmadhenu 88 Ahmadnagar Sultan of 130	78, 82, 83, 84, 86, 101,
Tillinguingui, Cartini	102, 122, 133
(670700RCC
Aitareya-Brāhmaņa 59,170,205 Āijvakas 12, 177	111, 168
	Āndhras 142
Ajit Singii	Anga 160
urvu	1110
Akbar 41, 60, 130, 203	Aniruddha 41, 211
Al-Biruni—on the treatment of women in India 54, 193-194
Michandor	Antalcidas (King) 124
Alma mater 1	THITEMATICAL (TTOO)

PAGE	PAGE
Antigonus 142	Arthas'āstra
Antigonus 142 $\underline{Anv\bar{a}rohana}$ 186 $\overline{Anv\bar{i}k_ik_i}$ 12, 148	classification of smrti in 98
$\bar{A}nv\bar{\imath}k\bar{\imath}ik\bar{\imath}$ 12, 148	schools of Dharmas/āstra āpad-dharma 48, 161-162	recognised by 112; 113, āpad-dharma 48, 161-162 Aparārka 41, 54, 57, 76	133, 139, 141, 148, 149, 158
on sources of Vidyā- 95;	201. 212
129, 152, 188, 191, 193,	Arthas:āstra of Kauţilya the
194, 198, 206	locus classicus of Indian
Apastamba 16, 24, 50-51, 87,	Polity 5; 6, 19, 56
93, 148, 162	arthavāda 81
S'loka—Āpastamba 163;	Ārya 48
171, 173, 182, 184, 189, 212	Āryāvarta—limits of 159, 161
$ap\overline{u}rva$ 25	Asahāya-bhāṣyas on Manu,
Arājatā 45, 102	Gautama, etc. 18; 40, 87
(see also Anarchy)	asavarņāvivāha 52
Archæological Survey of	As'oka—patronised Ājīvakas
Western India, V 198	12; 43
Aristotle 6	granted a respite of three
Arjuna 34	days to offenders who were (see Kārtavīrya)	punished between sentartha 29	ence and execution 44, 77
Arthas āstra (general) 26,43,82	alleged case of change in Arthas'āstra 5, 6, 7	Law 135
as the sixth veda 11	Prohibition of Vedic sacri-secular character of 12	fices by 138-9
differences with Dharma-	Rock Edict I 138
' s'āstra 13	Pillar Edict II 138
no real conflict with Dhar-	Pillar Edict IV 136-7, 138
mas'āstra 13, 82-83	Pillar Edict V 138
Mimāmsā rules of interpre-	Pillar Edict VII 138, 140
tation applied 13-14;	Asoka's dharma is Hindu 140
unacceptable to the Bud-	Rock Edict V 140
dhist because of its s'ruti	and Dharmavijaya 140
source 14; 15, 16;	and Dharmavijaya 140 Asoka (Smith) 137, 140
as public law 23, 24	aspṛsiya 49
education of a prince in 46, 56;	reduction of the rules of 166-7
revived interest in the 64;	Āsiramadharma 26, 39
striking resemblance with	(see also Dharma)
European Cameralism 68;	Astrology 26
76, 77, 78, 84	āsura 50
Kautilya's own bhāṣya on 87	Asuravijaya 140
as planned economy 92	As'vaghoṣa 158
differences with Rājanīti	Āsvalūyana-grhyasūtra 87
and Dharmas'āstra 92-93:	As'vamedha 38, 54, 60

INDEX

PAGE	PAGE
As'vamedha	Bhagavadgitā 115
performance by kings of	Bhakti 38:
dubious caste 122, 197,	faith in God in preference to
198; 123, 166, 195, 196	sacrifices recommended 115
Atharva-veda	Bhaktimārga 49 ;
Arthas'āstra included under	the struggle of its adherents
11; 76, 77, 177, 185, 186	with smartas 168
ātatāyin 53, 83, 191, 206, 207	with smartas 168 Bhaktiprakās a 115
atides'a 118	Bhandarkar, D. R., 137, 138, ātmahatyā 52	196
ātmanastustih 47	Bhandarkar, R. G. 168
Atri 53, 192	Bhallāvins 160
Aufrecht 5	Bhānu—grandson of Sankara
Autobiography of Max Mueller	bhatta 130
88	Bhairavācārya 186
Aurangazib 41, 130	Bhāras'ivas 14, 39, 122, 123, 198
Authorities—conflict of 96, 99	Bhāsa 187
Āyurveda 26	bhāṣya 18, 19, 20, 22, 84, 87, 199
•	Bhāṣyakāras 19
В	Bhattacharya, B., 208
Bālambhaţţa Pāyaguņde 88	Bhattasvāmin commentary on
$B\bar{a}lambhattīya$ 88	Kautilīva 84
Bali 49	Kautillya 84 Bhavişyapurāna 97 Bhavanāga 123 Bhaves'a 212, 215 Bhois 41 56 129 200 201
Ballālasena 41, 56, 198, 211	Bhavanāga 123
Bāṇa 52, 106, 188, 212	Bhaves'a 212, 215
D	Bhoja 41, 56, 129, 200, 201
Banerji, Gurudoss 171	Bhṛgu 207
Banerji Sastri, Dr. A., 57, 84	Bhūpāla-Kṛtya-Samuccaya 129
Banerji, R. D. 124, 183, 197	Bhūvarāha 125
Basant Singh 189	Bir Singh, patron of Mitra
Baudhāyana 16, 90, 91, 116,	Mis'ra 60, 203
156, 157, 159, 160, 162,	Mis'ra 60, 203 Bombay Gazetteer 145, 213
169, 177, 183, 184, 212	Bombay, University of-Its
Baudhāyanaparisista 170	school of Sociology 2, 67
Bāz Bahadur 203	Borradaile-translation of Vya-
Besnagar 115	vahāra-mayūkha 72
Bhadravarman of Campā 45, 145	Brahman, Immunities of a 75-76
Bhadres'vara 145	Brahmaburāna 177 182
Bhagavanta Bhāskara 58, 203,	Brahmapurāna 177, 182 Brahmasūtra 18
204	Breloer 92
3hāgabhadra—King, Kas'iputra	Brhadratha, the last Maurya
124	ruler 106
Bhagavantā Singh of Bhareha 202	Brhannāradīyapurāna 162,
Bhāgavata, Sri 164	176, 185
2,000,000,000,000	1,0,100

PAGE	PAGE
Brhaspati 6, 20, 40;	Candes'vara, sections omitted
accepts usages of caste of	by 29, 96; 41, 57, 61, pratiloma unions 48;	62, 108, 129, 200, 204,
pleading for the inheritance	210, 211, 212, 213
of the childless-widow 51;	composed Rajanīti-ratnā-
83;	kara by royal command
on Nyāya 114;	215
on dana 115; 116, 121, 134,	Candragupta-(Maurya) 140,
149	141, 185
on yukti 153-4; 155	Candragupta II 52, 85, 148, 183
on the rights of women 172;	Cāndrāyaṇa 192, 196
191	Caranavyūha 76 Caritra 47, 62, 132, 148
Brhaspatismṛti 18, 70, 121	Caritra 47, 62, 132, 148
Brhatparās'ara 163	Castor 199
Brhatparäsara 163 Brhatsamhitā 85, 204 Revinabatti 44 139	Castrense peculium 50, 168
Brūnahatti 44, 139	Caturvargacintāmaņi 56, 199
Buddha, the 17, 128	Caturās rama 29
Buddhists, reference in Manuto	Cāturvarņa 29
to customs of 12;	Caturvims atimata 40, 54, 193
abhorrence of 48; 77, 78;	Catussatītīkā 107
Buddhism, under the Mauryas	Celibacy, condemnation of
37; 51, 122;	prolonged 176, 177
Mimāmsā—effect on 125-7;	Chāndogya Upanişad 77 influence of Sankara on the	Chips from a German Work-decline of 127-8;	shop 89
as influencing ideas of sex-	Cho Dink rock—inscription 145
equality 175;	Cikitsāprakāsa 95
Buehler 155, 157, 171, 173, 178	Cintāmaņi—of Vācaspati
Burnell A. C., translation of	Mis'ra 130
Dāyabhāga of Mādhava's	Citnis Bakhar 60
bhāşya 72	Citnis, Malhar Rāmarāo 197
Burke, Edmund 61, 213, 214	Civil Law 16, 20, 23, 40, 50;
Butuga II 145	Indian law of person and C
. •	property 50, 56 Codanālingātidesia 118 Coda of Ganton Larra 8 71 72
CALCUTTA-University of-	Code of Gentoo Laws 8, 71, 72
Carmichael professorship 2	Colas 45, 142
Special Readership lectures 5	their claim to follow Manu's
Tagore Law Professor-	lead 145-6
ship 73	Colebrooke, H.T., his digest 9;
Cambodia 49	his study of Mīmāmsā 21;
Campa, Kaundinya emperors	71, 72, 88 89-90:
of 45, 145	Considerations of Hindu
Campā—(R. C. Majumdar) 145	Law 72

PAGE	PAGE
Coronation—release of prison	Devala
ers at the time of 44	claim to supersede other omission of the rite of 46	smrtis 128; 169, 170, 173,
Corpus Inscriptionum Indi-	192, 194
carum III 125	Devalasmrti 40, 192, 194
Cowell, H. 73;	Devanna Bhatta 52, 180, 188
and Thomas, F.W. 212	Devi-candragupta 183
Crooke, W. 189	Devi-candragupta 183 Devasthali, G.V. 126
Cyavana 167	Dhamma (Buddhist) 45;
Custom and Law—see Law.	of the Rock and Pillar Edicts
	139-140
_
D	Dharma-mahāmātya 143 Dhanya Viṣṇu 124, 125
	Dharma, Indian literature on
DAIVAPUTRA 144	5, 20, 24;
Dalapati 130	as fixed in action 25;
Damodara 130	compared to Law of Nature
Dāna 38, 119, 169	25;
Dānakhanda 115	divided into pravṛtṭi and
The second secon	nivṛtti dharma 26;
Dāna-ratnākara 211 Dānasāgara 199, 211	Sādhāraņa and Asādhā.
Danda divine origin of 13, 102;	rana 26;
34, 80	relating to asrama 26;
Dandaniti 93, 102, 103, 134, 148	guna 26;
Danda-pārusya 78	nimitta 26; 27, 29, 30, 31,
Dandin 44, 45, 135, 136	34, 35;
Das'aratha, grandson of As'oka	divine character and uni-
patronised Ajīvakas 12, 77	versal applicability of 35.
Das akumāracarita 135, 186	versal applicability of 35; in times of stress 36;
Das'ās'vamedha-ghat 123	as good for all time 37; 39
Dattaka-candrikā 72	Hindu dharma under
Dattakamimāmsā 72	Muhammadan rule 41;
Dattātreya 106	42, 43;
Dawn of New India 72	As okan prohibition of cast-
$D\overline{a}ya$ 70, 71	ration 44; 45;
Dāyabhāga 9, 10, 19, 70, 72, 73	the functions of the state are Dāyakramasamgraha of Sri	in the interests of 46; 47, 48;
	elasticity of 48-9
Des'ācāra 133	indicated by good conscience
$Devad\overline{u}saka$ 76	50; 52, 55;
Kṛṣṇa 9,72 Des ācāra 133 Devadūṣaka 76 Devagiri 40,41,129	literature 56;
(see also Yādavas of Devagiri)	breach of Dharma 61; 62,
Devala—on reinstatement of	64, 79, 80, 82, 83, 92;
fallen women 53.54.	mahāiana nath of 02, 03, 94,

PAGI	PAGE
Dharma	Dharmas [,] āstra
connotation of 93-4 classifications of 94	; scope and content of 29
	; the only relevant content of comprehends all knowledge	the Veda 30, 32
94-95	; vastness of D. literature 33,
adjustment to capacity of 109	; 100-101
absence of the influence of	causes of its growth without legal fictions in Hindu	interruption 34
Dharma 110-111; 132,	Schools of and progress 36;
133, 138, 140, 156, 157	37, 41, 44, 45, 56, 60, 62,
āpad-dharma 161; 162
relaxation to yuga-dharma	as priestly twaddle 68
163-164; 183, 184, 197
Dharmādhikarī 45
same as Dharmāmātya 143	early English translations
Dharmakos'a 25
Dharmānkus'a 143	attitude of Indian courts to
Dharmāmātya 45	89;
same as Dharmādhikārī 143	digests under patronage and
Dharma-mahārāja—as title	authorship 129;
among Pallava Kings 143-4	difference between Artha-
as a Kadamba title 144	s'āstra, Dharma-s'āstra
Ganga 145	and Rājanīti 92-93; dharma-sthānas 20
in Campā 145	dharma-sthānas 20
Dharma-pradhāna 143	omission of Rājadharma and
Dharmapradīpa 162, 164, 166,	Vyavahāra in digests 95;
167, 176, 177, 181, 184,	composition of Dharma
185, 195	s'āstras in periods of civil
Dharmarāja-ratha 144	troubles 101
Unarmarajas 45	in the Musalman period 129,
Dharmaratna of Jimuta-	130;
vāhana 70, 73 Dharmas āstra 5, 6, 7, 8;	artha content of 133; 148;
	$ekav\overline{a}kyatvam$ 150-152; 167, vyavahāra content of 9-11,	168, 197, 199
12, 68;	Dharma-Saukhya 26
comparison with Arthas'āstra	Dharma-sthīya 78
13;	Dharma-s \overline{u} tra 70
Arthas'āstra core of 14, 84;	Dharma-sthānas 26
Rājadharma content of later	Dharmāvatāra, title of Māra-digests belongs properly	simha 145
to, 15; 17, 20, 21, 23, 24,	Dharmavijaya 45, 140, 143
26, 27	Dhruvadevi 183
parts of Kalpataru described	Dialogues of the Buddha 86
27-8	Dilina 146

INDEX

PAGE	PAGE
Divorce 175-176;
(see marriage)	Gains of Learning Act 168
Doctrine of Representation	Gaņapati S'āstri, T. Mahā-
118-121
Doctrine of Weakness	Arthas āstra 19
(see yugadharma)	edn. of Kāmandaka's
Dvaitanirnaya 42, 130	Nītisāra 84; 86, 87, 201
Dvaita-viveka 130	Gāndharva 50
Dynasties of the Kanarese	Gangas 39, 45, 144
Districts 145, 213	Gangas of Talkad 145
-	Gangas of Talkad 145 Gāngeyadeva 53, 189
E	Gaudas 112
Early History of India 198	•
	16;
Early History of Iustitutions
69, 70, 90	700 740 776 760 777
Eggeling 120, 139
BRavaryatva 47, 112, 150-152	Gautamīputra S'atakarņi 198
Epics—as fifth and sixth cate-	Cantae Code of Holbed 71
gory of the Veda—thrown	Charges I D 06 117
open to women and s'ūdras	Gentoo Ĉode of Halhed 71 Gharpure, J.R. 96, 117 Ghiyaz-ud-din-Tughlak 211
11	Ghosh, Nagendra Nath 196 Ghosel Dr. II N
Epigraphia Carnatica 144	Ghosh, Nagendra Nath 196
Epigraphia Indica 143, 182, 189	Gilosai, Di. C.N.
_	Golden Age reproduced by a
${f F}$	good king 34
Title the second of Title Jos I was Transfer	(see Rāmarājya)
Fictions in Hindu Law Texts	Goldstücker 72
79, 80, 97, 110, 111, 150,	Gopāla 41, 129, 200, 204, 213
151, 152	(000 220000000000)
Filius familius 168 Firuz Shah Tughlak 130	Coparan, ic.
1 11 42 0 11411 = 48 11411
Fleet, J.F., 122, 125, 139, 145, 187, 198, 213	Govindacandra of Kanauj
Formichi 85	Govindasvāmin on Baudhā-
Freedom—based on the dis-	yana-dharma-s u tra 86, 87 charge of the state—duty of	100 protection 45
	Great Epic of India 186
• G	Gṛhasthāsrama (see marriage)
GADĀDHARA 118	Gṛḥya-sūtras 68, 177
Gāgā Bhaṭṭa as chief priest	Griffin 149
in the coronation of S'ivāji	Gupta Inscriptions 122, 123,
60; 130, 196
(see Vis'ves'vara Bhatta)	Guptas 39
(200 A 12 AG2 Autu Tutuffu)	Outrus 35

PAGI	E PAGE
H	History of the Pallavas of South India 143
HALHED-trn. of the Sanskrit	South India 143 Hopkins 175, 186
digest of Vyavahāra, Gen-	Hıdayadhara, father of Lak-
too Code 8:71.7	2 smidhara 57
Haradatta 18, 17	2 şmidhara 57 3 Hultzsch, Dr. 141, 144
Hāralatā 21	1 Huns, as worshippers of Visnu
Harinātha 129	124, 125
Haris'candra—King 176 Harisimbadaya 21
Harisimhadeva 21
Hārīta 16, 165, 184, 188
Harsacarita 106, 183, 213	Imperial History of India 183
Harsacarita 106, 183, 213 Harsavardhana 187, 188 Hastings, Warren 8, 88	(see Jayaswal)
Hactings Warren 8.8	3 Index Verborum to the
Heliodorus—the Greek envoy	Arthas'āstra 91
39, 115
the Vaiṣṇava Greek 124	rule in 147-8
Hemacandra 5, 15, 56, 202	Indian Cameralism, Calcutta
Hemādri 41, 56, 101, 115, 129,
181, 198, 199, 200	Indian Philosophy 77, 126, 127-8
Henry VIII · 52
Hindu Law in Its Sources 171	Indo-Aryan Literature and Hindu Law and Custom 75, 101
Hindu Positivism 85, 92
Hindu Political Theories 107	Isvara-candra S'āstri, Pandit 201
Hindu Polity 107, 147
Hindu University—Benares—	of 11; 62, 77, 157 specialising in Indian Culture 1	J
the vision of its founders 2.3
Manindra foundation 5	JACOB, G.A. 110 Jagannātha 8, 10, 21
Manindra foundation 5 Hirahadgalli plates 198	Jagannātha 8, 10, 21
niranya 119	Jagannātha-Tarka pañcānana
Historical Introduction to	71, 72, 88
Roman Law 168	Jahāngir 41, 60, 130, 203 Jaimini 19
History of Dharma-Sāstra	Jaimini 19
Vol. 1 70, 197, 203	Jaimini 19 definition of Dharma 80; sūtras of 125, 150, 215, 216 Jaiminīya-Nyayāmālāvistāra 118
History of Hindu Law 171	sutras of 125, 150, 215, 216
History of India 198	Jaiminīya-Nyayāmālāvistāra
(see Banerji, R.D.)	118
nistory of India (Jayaswai)	Jainsabnorrence of 48; 77,
144, 145, 147
History of Jahangir 203	Jaisingh (of Amber) 60, 196, 197
History of Orissa 198	J.A.S.B. 143

PAGE	PAGE 100 100 100 100
Jaunpur (sultan of) 130	Kaliyuga 38, 163, 166, 177,
Java 49	181, 182, 183, 191, 207
Jayasimhakalapdruma 56,	Kalpasūtra and Vedic study
197, 199	17, 20, 84
Jayaswal, Dr. K. P. 24, 39,	Kāma 29 Kāmadhenu 41
51, 57, 79, 84, 92, 107,
122, 132, 144, 145, 147,	(see Gopala) Kāmbhojas 142
149, 159, 161, 171, 175, 200, 212, 215	Kāmbhojas 142 Kamalākara 21, 52, 101, 112,
Jha, Dr. Ganganath 94, 116, 117, 153, 170, 188	113, 130, 180, 188 Kāmandaka 5, 14;
	Kāmandaka 5, 14; on Rājamaņdala 14; 15, 16
Jimūtavāhana 8, 9, 70, 72, 73,
112, 121 Tīvasiddhi 186	omissions of, explained 17;
Jīvasiddhi 186 Jīvānanda 154	56, 58, 62, 147, 185;
JBBRAS (1925) 129	his Nītisara 85; 202, 204 Kāmes'a 212, 215
Jolly 23, 101, 170, 171	Kane, P. V. 70, 81, 86, 88, 96,
Jones, Sir William 69, 88	98, 101, 125, 129, 150,
Journal of the Benares	154 160 170 100 100
Hindu University 183	154, 169, 178, 180, 182, 188, 190, 191, 197, 199,
JRAS, 1909 and 1910 124, 139	200, 203, 204, 205, 207
	Kantaksodhana 78, 79
Jyotişaprakās [,] a 95 Jyautişa Saukhya 95	Kantaks odhana 78, 79 Kāpilas 159
Jyaarişa Saariiya 55	Karka 18, 87
K	Karma 25, 34
K	Karmacandāla 126
KADAMBAS 39, 45, 144, 198	Kārtavīrya 34, 105
Kādambarī 186, 188	Kārtikeya 185
Kālanirņaya 10, 73	Kās'i 22, 42
Kalanos 187	Kātyāyana 16, 18, 19, 40
Kālaviveka 10, 70, 73	on fallen women 53; 78, 83,
Kali 46	121, 133, 154, 155, 169, removing the taint of 148	176, 178, 180, 191, 205, 206
Kālidāsa 45	Kātyāyana-Srauta-Sūtra 119
on Manu's ideal 146	Kautilya 5
idealised gāndharva unions	on brahman immunities 11:
187
Kālikāpurāņa—on adoption	12, 14, 15, 16, 19, 36
31, 98, 170	on $ny\overline{a}ya$ 38; 43
Kalingā 160	on the care of destitute wo-
Kalivarjya 38, 39, 55, 151,	men 50;
176, 181, 183	divorce permited to non-paper by P. V. Kane on	brahman 52; 62, 75, 78,
181; 184, 185	83, 84, 85, 101, 112

PAGE	PAGE
Kautilya	Kisen Singh 189
on the authority of Nyāya	krcchra 38, 119
113-114; 122, 132, 133,	Krishna Rao, M. V. 145
134, 139, 141, 143, 149,	Krishnaswami Aiyar, T. 72, 180
158, 171, 174, 176, 179,	Krishnaswami Row. K. De-
181, 185, 186, 187, 190,	wan Bahadur—the foun-
192, 201, 202	dation 1
(see also Visnugupta)	his career 3, 4
of Brāhmana as a soldier 212	Kṛṣṇamṛga 48
Kautilīya 6, 63;	Kṛṣṇa Yādava 198 use of the Kautiliya in mo-	Krtyakalpataru—its various dern politics 68;	parts 27-28; 41, 57, 70
Bhaṭṭasvāmin on 84; 86, 92,	its missing parts discovered
102, 112, 114, 185, 201	95; 96, 100, 129, 143, 148,
Keith, A. B. 125	152, 155, 200, 203, 210, 211
Kharag Singh (Mahārāja) 189	Kṛtya-ratnākara 204
Kharavela of Kalinga 197	Kullūka 72, 78, 120, 129, 153,
King—knowledge of Dharma	157, 171, 213
essential to 35;	Kulottunga I 58
and as duty 108-109	Kumārapāla 15, 202
unhappiness a sign of error	Kumārila 19, 30, 40, 112, 125,
in governing 35	126, 127, 177
no legal power for indepen-	Kumbhi—Plates of Vijayadent legislation 43-45	simha 143
to make good stolen pro-	Kunti 184
perty 44, 209	Kus'a 48
union of interest with sub-	Kūṭa-yuddha 59, 204, 208
jects 101 Divine creation of 102
Divine creation of 102 as the maker of the age 102-	L
104
his power to make law	Laghu-arhan-nīti 202
repudiated 131-2	¥ 7
alleged power to make laws	Lakṣaṇa 26 Lakṣaṇaþrakās a 95
132-4, 135;	Laksmanasena 211
is under and not above law	Lakşmidhara 8, 15, 27, 29, 41
134-5	57, 58, 60, 61;
Royal pardon 137-8	content of the Kalpataru
qualification of a 208	62-4: 70, 101, 129, 148,
primogeniture 209	155, 200, 203, 204, 205,
duties of a conqueror 210	210, 211, 213
propitiation of unseen pow-	(see also Krtyakalpataru)
ers by 211	Laksmidhara and the Krtya-
de facto King recognised 213	kalpataru 95, 129, 203, 204

	PAGE	PA	GE
Law of Nature-cf. w	ith	Mādhava 8, 42, 74, 88, 112	2,
Dharma	37	198,
Law-municipal, constituti	on-	Mādhavācārya author of Kāla
al and secular	24	nirṇaya 10 ; 19, 73-4, 52, public and private		his treatment of Vyavahāra	a conflict of usage and ru	le 32	and Rājadharma 87; 118	3
c u s t o mary—classificat		151, 176, 177, 181, 185, 1	189
and systematisation	of	(see also Mādhava)
	3, 114	Mādhava Kongaņi Varma 🛚 🛚	145
differentiation of secu	ılar	Madras Epigraphist's Report	t
	78-79		145
vedic basis of Hindu L	aw	Madras Law Journal Golden	ı
	80-81	Jubilee Volume 95, 2	203
conflict of law not real	82-83	Madras University	1
adjustment to changing	SO-	founding of the chair of	E
ciety 109	9-110	Indian History	2
repudiation of king's pov	ver		.42
to make law	131-2		.44
alleged power to make l	aw	Mahābhārata 24, 48,	80
	132-5	Anusas'āna-parva 107; 209
king not above but und	der	212, 2	14
law	134		01
alleged change of law		S'ānti-parva 102, 104, 105,	,
. As'oka and the Maury	ras	107, 135, 146, 164, 174
. 1	35-6	175, 181, 182, 184, 186, 1	90
	on		93
customary law 148			18
Law and Custom	170	Mahādeva, patron of Hemādri
Law and Custom Legal Remembrancer Lobha-vija 140	100	129, 198, 1	99
Lobha-vija 140)-141		24
Lokāyata 12, 148,	, 159		67
MAC Cunn	214		77
			44
M			05
			12
MACNAGHTEN, Sir Francis	72		21
Macnaughten Sir Willia		on Indian Dharmas'āstra
Hay	72	69, 74, 79, 8	39
Macphail Dr. J. M.	140	allegation of priestly in-
Madanapāla	130	fluence on Hindu Law
Madanapārijāta 129,		90, 92, 110, 16
Madanaratna-pradīpa	200	Majumdar R. C. 14	-5
Madanaratna	130	Mānasollāsa 56, 62, 154, 201,
Madanasimha 41,	130	20	12

PAGE	PAGE
Mandala, theory of 60, 63	Marriage
Mandalik V. N.—his transla-	indissolubility of 51, 175-176; cancellation of divorce etc. 51
tion of Yājāavalkya Smrti	the state of the s
88, 195; 101	divorce permitted to Non-
Māndavya 154	brahman by Kautilya 52
Māngadur grant 144	reduction in the number of Manindracandra Nandi, Maha-	valid marriages 169-170
raja of Cossimbazaar 67	right of unmarried daughter
Manindra Foundation	to expenses of marriage
(see—Hindu University-	^ 173-4
Benares)	marriage an obligation to
Mankaliputta, Gosāla 77	woman 174-5
Mañjus [,] rī-mūlakalpa 183	gṛhasthās:rama 177
Manu—usages of heretical as-	gṛhasthāsrama 177 ,, praised 177
sociations as valid 12; 14,	hypergamous unions prohi-
16;	bited 185
Asahāya on Manu 18; 30	Maskarin 18, 87
condemns use of Nyāya 38;	bhāṣya of 156
45, 69, 83, 84, 93, 98, 99	Mātrvisņu 124, 125
on the authority of Nyāya	Matsyapurāna 147, 182
113-114; 126, 132, 136,	Mauryan Polity 79, 140
137, 139, 142, 145, 149,	Mauryas 44, 45
150, 151, 152, 153	Mauryas-as changing the law on the usage of a good s'udra	of theft 135-6
155-6; 157, 158, 158, 159,	Max Mueller 20, 88, 89
162, 165, 169, 170, 171,	Mayūkhas 41
172, 173, 175, 177, 171,	(see Nilakantha)
172, 173, 175, 177, 181, 182, 183, 184, 186, 191,	Mayūkha, Vyavahāra 9
193, 195, 206, 207, 209, 212	Mayūra Sarma 144, 198
Manu and Yājnavalkya 79,	Mayūra Sarma 144, 198 Medhātithi 18, 30
92, 99, 122, 132, 149,	on valid smrtis 38; 40, 43
159, 161, 171, 175, 212 explains the vedic sanction to sahamarana as ana-
Manusmṛti 14, 18, 39, 69, 70,	lagous to that of black
72, 75, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81,	magic 52; 78, 80, 84, 111,
115, 120, 122, 123, 131,	115, 116, 117, 120, 131,
134, 136, 160, 161, 172,	repudiation of king's power
174, 178, 186, 187, 205, 212	to make law 131-132; 153
Mārasimha 145	on the practice of good men
Maritime activity—Indian 49	155; 157, 183, 187, 206, 207
Marriage—conferred equality	Meyer J. J. 23, 91, 92
to women 49	Mimāmsā—rules of interpre-reduction of the number of	tation, systematisation of forms of 50	13; 21, 24, 30, 40, 43

200	FAGE		PAGI
Mimāmsā		Nandas	18.
accepts as author	-	Nannarāja	143
practice of a good		Nanda Pandita 38,	84, 130, 193
interpretation of	82	Nārada—the divine	sage 108
application of rules		Nārada 17, 20, 40,	78, 83, 98, pretation to Dharr		114, 132, 133,	169, 171,
and Arthas/āstra	84	176, 180, 1	184, 190, 191
Colebrooke's study o		Nārada-paris:işṭa	191
	90 ; 9 5	Nāradasmṛti—as ex	kample of hypotheses of	96	civil law	16; 20, 70
effects of its spread		conflicts of law no	ot real 82
dhism 125-127; 1	34, 151,	Nāradīyamanu-sam	ihitā 181
	157	Nāradīyapurāņa	182
rules of interpreta		Narasimha-varman	144
applied to Hind	lu Law	Nārāyaņa Bhatta	130
texts	150	Nārāyaņa	88
Mimāmsā-sūtra	125, 126	Nāsik	22, 42
Miscellaneous Essays	90	Natural Science (se	e Lāksana)
Mitākṣarā 9, 41, 72,	88, 120,	Nātyadarpana	183
121, 129, 133, 1.	52, 157,	Nāyanikā—queen	165, 198
	, 204, 206	Nelson J.H.	89
Mithila	42	Netaji Palkar	55
Mitra Mis'ra 26, 41, 48	, 56, 58,	nibandhas	20, 24
59, 99, 112, 1 50, 1.	56, 158,	as the fashion of a	each court
164	, 165, 200		1, 42, 56, 84
see also Vīramii	trodaya	by kings	199, 200
203, 208	, 209, 210	Nilakantha 31, 58, 59	9, 98, 113,
mleccha	46, 54		50, 188, 200
(see Yavana, Vrāt		see May ukhas-	-Rāianīti
Moksa	29	mayūkha 202,	205. 206.
Mookerji, Asutosh	121, 140	,	207, 208
Mṛges'avarma	144	Nilakantha Sāstri	146, 198
Mudrārākṣasa	186	Nirukta	182
Muktyār	121	Nirvāņa	25
Muirhead J.	168	Niti literature	56
-	,	Niti-kalpataru	210
N .		Nitimārga	145
		Nītimayūkha 200,
Nābhākas	142	200,	207,208
Nāgoji Bhatta	196	Nītīsāra 14, 84, 85, nāmātides a	118	2., 01, 05,	202, 204
Nāmdev	168	(see also Kāman	daka)
Nāna Fadnavis	199	Nitis'āstra	93
Nānāghat inscription	165, 198	Nītivākyāmṛta	15, 202
	, +	- · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	10, 404

DICE	PAGE
PAGE 29 50 110 150	Pātalīputra 138
Niyoga 38, 52, 112, 150 gradual disappearance of 184	patria potestas 50, 170
G	peculium castrense 168
	Peddibhatta 129
Zi zoriore. Pragatati	Pitrdayitā 211
Nyāya (logic) 24, 38, 95 authority of Kautilya and	Political Philosophy of Burke,
Manu on 113-114; 133, 151	214
	Pollux 199
Nyāyakos'ā 119	Pollock 69, 74, 109, 168
O	Position of Women in Hindu
Oriental Conference—Eighth 182	Civilisation 165, 169, 171
Orissa 48	Pracchanna 80
P	Pracetas 116
Padmapūrāņā—Uttarakhaņḍa	Prādvivāka 57, 143
128	Prajāpati 153
Paindas 142	Pratāparudradeva—of Orissa 99
Paithan 22, 42	Pratiloma, usages of castes 48
Paithinasi 48, 160, 167, 188	Pratinidhi 38, 118-121, 215-216
Pallava 39, 45, 198	Duratioth go zdaya 100
Panas 139	Pravarasena II 122, 198
Pandita 42, 143	Prāyascitta 11, 16, 23, 38
Pāṇḍyas 142	of mlecchas 112, 194 195, 200
Pāṇini 19	Prayogaratna 130
Paramāras of Mālva 40	Present Administration of
Parās'ara 53, 73, 74, 83, 151,	Hindu Law 72
161, 163, 164, 166, 198	Princes, education of 148
Parās ara-mādhavīya 164	Private law 23
Parās aras mṛti 16	Privy Council-Judicial com-commentary by Mādhava on	mittee of 9
42; 70, 72. 73, 176, 177,	Property, alienation by widow
181, 185, 189, 193	for pious purposes 51-52,
Pāraskara 87	178, 180
Paras'urāma, killed Kārta-	Ptolemy 142
, viyārjuna 106	Public law 23
paripālanam 45	Pulakes'in I 198
Parisad 32, 39, 42, 99-100	Punishment-mixture of spiri-
under Räma 108	tual and secular 74-75
substitutes for in dharma-	Punjab 48
vyavasthā 131	Punya 25
Pārthasārathi Mis'ra 112	Purāņas, thrown open to
Partition-uddhāra vibhāga 182-3	women and sudras-as fifth
Pāsaņdas 12, 78, 159	and sixth categories of the Pās'upatas 159	vedas 11; 26, 30, 31, 39, þātaka 75	62, 95, 157, 181, 182

PAGE	•	PAGE
PurMication, reduction of the	Rājanīti-mayūkha—of	Nila-rules of 166-167	kantha	57 , 5 8
Purodhā 42	Rajanīti-ratnākara 57	, 108,
Purohita 142 see also purodhā	200, 204, 210, 2
Puşyabhūti 186	Rājas'āsana 43, 1
Pusyamitra 39, 106, 197, 188,		196, 197
212	Rājendra II	146
Put 170	Rājataranginī	188
_	Rājya S'ri	187
${f R}$	Rākṣasa	50
D. F	Rāma—an ideal ruler	34
RADHAKRISHNAN, Sir S. 77,	as the restorer of the G
126, 127-8	Age	106
Rāghavan, Dr. V. 183	Ramachandra Dikshitar,
Raghunandana, 8, tattvas of 70; 130	Rāmānuja	79, 140 18, 127
Raghuvams/a 85, 105, 146	Rāmarājya	105
Rājadharma 4	Rāmāyaņa 105, 108, called Rajaniti 7		46, 165
Dharmas'āstra as Rāja-	Ranbîr Singh-Mahara
dharma 32; 55, 57, 58,	Kashmir and Jammu
62, 65	Rangaswami 114, 115,
scope of 68; 70, 74, 140, 200	120, 121, 1	42, 171
works by court Pandits	Ranjit Singh, Maharaja	71, 189
as 203-204	Rapson 86, 1	15, 124
Rājadharma-Kalþataru 62-4,	Rāṣṭrakūṭas and their T	'imes
142, 200, 205, 210, 211,		143
Rājadharma-Kāmadhenu 200	Ratnākara	200
Rājadharma-Kaustubha of	(see Candesvara)
Anantadeva 57, 59, 200,	Real-politik	. 24
203, 208	Reflections on the Fr
$R\bar{a}jadharma-P r a k \bar{a} s a 57,$		213-214
200, 208 Rājādhirāja 198	Religions of India Representation, Doctrin	175
Rājamahendra-Rājakesari 145		18, 121
Rājanīti—preference given to	Rgveda	182
heretics etc., in an audi-	Rhys Davids DrT.W.	86
ence with the king 12	Rome	169
subjects for the study of a	Roman law	50
prince 12; 24, 56, 70;	Rock Edict XIII	141
differences with Dharma	Royal pardon (see king)
s'āstra and Arthas'āstra	Rtam	25
92-93; 200	Řudradāman	106
Rājanīti of Bhoja 200	Rudrasena I	123

S	PAGE	PAGE S'ankha-Likhita 16, 48 100,
S'ABARA 19, 2	1, 3 0, 84, 90, 111, 112, 177	142, 160 Saptānga 197 Sarabhoji, Maharaja 88
Sabhya	91, 98, 99	Sarasvatī-vilāsa 199
Sachau, E.	193	Sarkar B. K. 23, 24, 85, 92,
		93, 104, 202, 204, 205
Sādharana Dhar Sahamarana	52	Sarkar, K. L. 150 instances of	53, 112	Sarvajña—Nārāyaņa 155
(see Sati)	•	Sarvoru Sarman Trivedi 72, 88
Saints-Vaisnava	and S'aiva 50	S'atakarni I 165, 198
Samana—mahān	nātas 143	S'ātakarnis 39
Samarāngaņa-sū	tra 201	S'atapatha-Brāhmaṇa 120,
Samayācara	151	139, 190
Sambhaji	197	S'ātātapa 176
f Sambh $ar u$ ka	108	S'ātavāhanas 14
raised to Heave		Satī (see Sahamaraṇa) 52, 186-9
Samiti	99	Satraps—of the Dakhan 45
Saṁkalþa	47	Ṣaṭtrimsanmata 127, 152, 159
Samnyāsa—by n		S'aunaka 76
	37, 51	Saurya-dhanam 169
Samsāra	25, 34	Scientific Study of Hindu
Samgraha	84	Law (Nelson) 89
Samskāra	11, 31, 49, 200	Scythian 39
Samskāraprakāso	7 165	Shadilal, the Hon'ble Sir 9
Samskāraprakāṣa Sāmkhya Samsthā	12, 148	Shama Sastri R, Maha-
Samsthā Samudragupta	113	mahopadhyāya 76, 91, 192
Samudragupta	39, 85	Srigondekar, G. K. 202 Simhavarman 144, 182
relation to an o	outcaste clan	Simhavarman 144, 182
0 11 14 17	123 , 1 98 216 197	Sindh 48
Sandal, M. N. Sane K. N.	216	Siṣtācāra 47, 151
	197	supersession by sādhū-
Sangha-Buddhist	12, 17	nāmācāra 156-8
S'ankara	18, 40, 77	Sitā 165
Influence in the		Sivā-cchatra patice caritra 197
	hism 127, 128	S'ivāji 55, 59
S'ankarabhatta	21, 130	his expiation and coronation
Sankararāma Sas	stri 79, 84,	195-196; 197, 199
	110, 150, 151	S'ivaskandavarman 143, 198
S'ankarārya com		Skandapurāṇa 119
Kāmandaka's N		Smith, V. A., 77, 137, 139, 140, 198, 203
commentary on F		Smṛti 14, 15, 16, 17, 23, 28,
· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	183	30, 31
		50, 51

PAGE	PAGE
Smrti	Sthanes'vara 186
limitless in extent 31	Strange Sir T. 9, 72
dṛṣṭārtha and adṛṣṭārtha	Strīdana : 81, 178, 200
37, 97	Subrahmanya Aiyar, Dr. S., authority of a smṛti depends	Foundation 4
on its merits 38, 116; 39,	Subodhini 129
40, 46, 50, 62, 74, 75, 82	Sucet Singh 189
lost smṛtis 41	S'uddhi 11, 166
distance between smrtis	S'ūdra—usage of a good S'ūdra
and commentaries on them	48, 155-6;
87, 91	animus against the learned represent literature of magic	48, 158-159;
92; 112	condemnation of mendicancy
smṛtis endless and recogni-	and celibacy of a 122
tion of a modern smrti	relaxation of duties to 164
116-118; 151, 207	S'ūdraka 187
Smrticandrik \bar{a} 28, 51, 96,	S'ūdrakamalākara 180
153, 157, 173, 180, 187,	S'ukra 6, 82, 133
200, 207	Sukranīti 42, 56, 76, 79, 102,
Smṛtikaustubha 130	104, 107, 131, 143
Smṛtimuktā-phala 28, 96	S'ūlapāņi 130, 158
(see also Vaidyanātha	S'unas's'epa 170
Dīkṣita)	S'ungas 14, 39
Smṛtīnām Samuccaya 192	Sutherland, J.C. 72
$Sm_{\tilde{I}}ttttam Sumtestaytt 132$ $Sm_{\tilde{I}}tis\bar{a}ra$ 129	Sūtra—style and purpose 17,
Smṛtisārasamgraha 40	18, 19
Smṛtisāra-samuccaya 88	Suttas (Buddhist) 17
Smṛtiviveka 40	Suttas (Buddinst)
Smrtyantara 31
• •	${f T}$
Somadeva 5, 15, 17, 56, 102, 202
Some Aspects of Ancient	TAGORE Law Professorship
Indian Culture 196	72, 73
Somes'vara 5, 56, 154, 201	Takṣas'ilā 124
Somes vara 5, 56, 154, 201 S'rāddha 200	Taittirīya-Brāhmaņa 174
Srauta 200	taṇḍula 119
Sreni 20	Tarkālankāra, S'rī Kṛṣṇa 72
S'rīdatta 129	Tagore P. C. 72
	•
	Taxes, as king's wages $35, 107$ tirtha $48, 201$
Srikrṣṇa, author of Dāya- kramasamaraha	Tod 48, 201
Srotriya 29, 156
Sruti 14, 62, 80, 112, 149	Todar Mal 26, 130
Steele 149	see also Dharma Saukhya

RĀJADHARMA

	PAGE		PAGE
Toramana	125		58, 85, 204
Tripiṭaka	17, 86		130
Triratna—Buddhi	st 25	Varņas—readmiss	ion into 37
$Tristhal \bar{\imath} set u$	130	Varņās rama-dha	rma 48
Tukārām	168	Vārtā	148
Tupper, Sir C.L.,	14 9	vārtika	18
tyāga	75		39, 198
		Vasistha 16, 18	3, 52, 53, 54,
U		86, 126, 149	, 156, 157,
		160, 169, 17	0, 174, 178,
Иссні ята Gaņapa	ti 168	184, 190, 191,	192, 196, 207
Udayendiram grant	199		201
$Udd\bar{a}lakavrata$	195, 196	Vāsudeva	124
University of Bomb	ay,	Vātsyāyana	187
see Bombay U	niversity	Veda—the bed-roo	k of Hindu
University of Calcu	tta,	religion	30;
see Calcutta U:	niversity	smṛti must agre	e with 30;
University of Madra	ıs,	self-evident and a	uthoritative
see Madras Un	iversity		94-95
Upanayana	31	Vedāngas	95
non-investiture a	privilege 49	Vedānta Des'ika	106
for Vrātyas	54	Vedānta-sūtras	77
for women 165-	166; 174.	Vedic Bases of His
	195, 196	P. V. Kane	81
Upapurāņa	31	vidhi	80, 81
Us'anas	82	Vidyādhanam	169
Utsanna	80	View of Hindu La
Uttānūr plates	145	Vijayanagara	42, 189
		Vijayasimha	143
		Vijñānabhikşu	128
		Vijnanes'vara 8, 15,	26 53 57
Vacanātides:a	118	78, 83, 84, 95	112 129
Vācaspati Mis'ra	41, 72, 130	150, 152, 157,	192 104
Vācaspatya	118	, 101, 10,	203, 206, 207
Vākātakas	14, 39, 198	Vijītānesvara and	1 I.abomi
Vakil	121	dhara	95, 129
Vais'ampāyana	5 .		43, 47, 81-82
Vaisnavism and S'aiv	rism 168	Vikramāditya VI	58, 202
Vaivasvata Manu	145	Village Communiti	es 89
Vājasaneyi-Brāhma		Vinaya-sthiti-sthāţ	65 09 10ha 100 142
V ajracchedi $kar{a}$	158	Vīramitrodaya 26,	20 OF 07
Vāman S'āstri Islamī	ourkar 181	99 115 150	40, 7J, 7/, 150 151
Vanga	160	99, 115, 150,	72 101 000
Varadarāja	72, 88, 121	Vis'ākhadatta	73, 191, 206
· -	·, OU, 141	v 13 annaudila	183

PAGE	PAGE
Visnu as both king and subject 35, 108	W
Vișpu 16, 18 20, 178	WARREN HASTINGS, see Has-commends Sati 52; 115	tings, Warren
Visnugupta 52; 113 Visnugupta 144 Visnugupta 19, 85	Weber, A, 5
Visnugunta 19.85	Wife—has a claim to a moiety
Vişnupurāna 46, 76, 95, 106,	of husband's punya 51, 171
127, 158, 159	Brhaspati on the rights of a
Vişnu-smrti 70, 75, 138, 139,	172-173
153, 184, 187	Wilson, H. H., 9
Vis'varūpa 18, 40, 80, 84, 153,	Women—care of the destitute
158	50, 171;
Vis'ves'varabhatta 41, 129, 196	work-houses for rehabilita-
see also Gāgā Bhaṭṭa	tion of fallen women 53
Vīvādabhangārnava 88
	safeguards against offences against 53
· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
Vīvadūrņavabhañjana 71 Vīvādaratnākara 139	Constitute of Section 1 treatment of fallen women
Vivadārņavasetu 71, 72, 78
Vivādasārārņava 72, 88	relaxation of duties for 164
Voyages to prohibited areas 162-163	upanyana for 165-166
	status of (general) 171
Vrātyaprāyas cittanirņaya 196	wife's share in the merit
Vrātya-prāyas citta-Sam	(punya) of the husband 171
graha 196 Vrātvas 54	Brhaspati on the rights of a
Vrātyas 54 treatment of 195-196	wife 172-173;
	right of unmarried daughter
a civilised community 54, 55	to expenses of marriage
Vrātyastoma 54, 196-197	173-174;
Vrtti—of Katyayana 19	marriage an obligation to
Vyāsa 16, 153, 169, 188, 191	174-5
Vyavahāra 7 8, 23, 68, 70,	sex—equality—alleged Bud-
74, 92, 113, 132, 133, 200	dhist influence on 175
Vyavaharamātṛkā 10, 70, 73,	marriage indissoluble 175-6
121	treatment of outraged and
Vyavahāra mayūkha 51	abducted women 189-192;
translation by Borradaile 72	on independent right to peron adoption 98; 101, 169,	form sacrifice 216
180, 191, 203, 204, 207	Wynch, P. M. 72
Vyavahāranirnaya 72, 88,
121	Y
Vyavahāradarpana 19
$Vyavasth\bar{a}$ 32	YADAVAS of Devagiri 40
Vyutpattivāda 118	Yajña 38, 17 4

PAGE	PAGE
Yajñasvāmin's commentary	Yama and Yami 182
on Vasistha 18, 86	Yāmunācārya 127
Yājñvalkya—recognises cus-	Yas'obhita Madhyamarāja 198
toms of heretics 12, 78;	Yavana—see Vrātya, mleccha
non-inclusion of Yājīna-	Yavanas 142
valkya-smrti in the S.B.E.	Yoga 12, 148
series 88-89;	Yuga 38, 163, 182
16, 18, 19, 20, 30, 40, 41,	Yugadharma 38, 49;
70, 76, 79, 80, 81, 82,	relaxation of 163, 164
83, 84, 93	Yukti 47, 153-4
95, 98, 113, 132, 133,	Yuktikalpataru of Bhoja 56,
150, 151, 152, 153, 155,	201
158, 161, 162, 167, 169,
171, 173, 174, 184, 190,	Z
192, 195, 198, 206	_
Yama 16, 116, 165, 174, 176,	~ n  0
180, 195	Z.D.M.G. 84

PUBLICATIONS OF THE ADYAR LIBRARY

(The Theosophical Society, Adyar, Madras, S. India)

Λ.	KS.
8	1 2	A PRELIMINARY LIST OF THE SAMSKRT AND PRÄKRT MSS. in the Adyar Library. (Samskrt-Devanāgari) 1910 Boards Cloth	1.
0	5	A DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE OF THE SAMSKRT MSS. in the Adyar Library. By F. O. Schrader, Ph.D., Vol. I, Upanişads 1912. Cloth	²2.
0	10	THE MINOR UPANIȘADS (Samskrt) critically edited for the Adyar Library. By F. O. Schrader, Ph.D., Vol. I.—Samnyāsa 1912. Cloth	3.
0	10	AHIRBUDHNYA-SAMHITÄ OF THE PÄÑCAKĀTRA ĀGAMA (Samskṛt), Edited under the supervision of F. O. Schrader, Ph.D., 2 Vols. 1916 Cloth	4.
0	3	INTRODUCTION (English) TO THE PANCARATRA AND THE AHIRBUDHNYA SAMHITA. By F. O. Schrader, Ph.D. 1916. Cloth	5.
0	5	YOGA UPANIŞADS—20—with the Commentary of S'rī Upanişad Brahma Yogin. Edited by Pandit A. Mahadeva Sastri, B.A. 1920	б.
Q	5	SĀMĀNYA VEDĀNTA UPANIŞADS—24-with the commentary of S'ri Upanişad Brahma Yogin. Edited by A. Mahadeva Sastri, B.A. 1921	7.
0	4	VAISNAVA UPANISADS—14—with the Commentary of S'ri Upanisad Brahma Yogin. Edited by A. Mahadeva Sastri, B.A. 1923	8.
0	3	S'AIVA UPANIȘADS—15—with the Commentary of S'ri Upanișad Brahma Yogin. Edited by A. Mahadeva Sastri, B.A. 1925	9,
8	2	S'ĀKTA UPANIŞADS—8—with the Commentary of S'rī Upanişad Brahma Yogin. Edited by Pandit A. Mahadeva Sastri, B.A. 1925	10.
12	3 :	CATALOGUE OF SAMSKET MSS. in the Adyar Library (revised). Edited by the Pandits of the Adyar Library under the direction of Prof. C. Kunhan Raja, M.A., D. Phil. (Oxon.), 2 Vols. 1926 and 1928 Each	11.
0	4	SAMNYĀSA UPANIṢADS—17—with the Commentary of S'rī Upaniṣad Brahmayogin. Edited by T. R. Chintamani, M.A., and the Pandits of the Adyar Library, under the direction of Prof. C. Kunhan Raja, M.A., D. Phil. (Oxon.) 1929	12.
0	2	RUKMINI KALYĀŅA MAHĀ KĀVYA by Rājacūdāmani Diksita. Edited by the Pandits of the Adyar Library and Mr. T. R. Chintamani, M.A., under the direction of Prof. C. Kunhan Raja, M.A., D. Phil. (Oxon.) 1929	13.
0	5	Unpublished Minor Upanisads with the Commentary of S'rī Upanisad Brahma Yogin. Edited by the Pandits of the Adyar Library, under the direction of Prof. C. Kunhan Raja, M.A., D. Phil. (Oxon.) 1933	14.
		TEN MAJOR UPANISADS with the Commentary of S'rī Upanisad Brahma Yogin, Edited by the Pandits of the Adyar Library	15.

		Rs.	À.
	under the direction of Prof. C. Kunhan Raja, M.A., D. Phil. (Oxon.)
	Is'a to Aitareya Vol. I —1935 Chāndogya and Brhadāraṇyaka Vol. II —1936	4 6
	Vol. I Boards Vol. II	5	8
16.	MELARĀGAMĀLIKĀ of Mahāvaidyanātha S'ivan. Edited by Pandit S. Subrahmanya Sastri, F.T.S. 1937	2	0
17.	SANGRAHACŪDĀMAŅI—Edited by Pandit S. Subrahmanya Sastri, F.T.S. with a critical Introduction in English by T. R. Srinivasa Aiyangar, B.A., L.T. 1938	5	0
18.	PRATYABHIJÑĀHRDAYAM (The Secret of Recognition) with English Translation and Notes by Dr. K. F. Leidecker, M.A., Ph.D.,; Text edited by the Staff of the Adyar Library under the direction of Dr. G. Srinivasa Murti, B.A., B.L., M.B.C.M., Vaidyaratna, Hon. Director, Adyar Library. 1938	3	0
19.	BHAVASAMKRĀNTI-SŪTRA AND NĀGĀRJUNA'S BHAVASAMKRĀNTI S'ĀSTRA—with the Commentary of Maitreyinātha—with English Translation by Pandit N. Aiyaswami Sastri, Professor, S. V. S. College, Tirupati. 1938	2	4
20.	Yoga Upanisads. Translated into English by T. R. Srinivasa Aiyangar, B.A., L.T., and Pandit S. Subrahmanya Sastri, F.T.S. 1938	5	0
21.	* WHERE THEOSOPHY AND SCIENCE MEET (in four Parts) by a body of experts—Edited by Professor D. D. Kanga, M.A., I.E.S. (Retd.)
	Part 1. Nature—From Macrocosm to Microcosm Part 2. Man—From Atom to Man Part 3. God—From Humanity to Divinity Part 4. Some Practical Applications 1938
22.	ŖGVEDAVYĀKHYĀ, MĀDHAVAKŖTĀ—Edited by Dr. C. Kunhan Raja, M.A., D. Phil. (Oxon.) 1939	6	0
23,	THE NUMBER OF RASAS. By V. Raghavan, M.A., Ph. D., Department of Sanskrit, University of Madras, with a Foreword by Prof. M. Hiriyanna, M.A., formerly Professor of Samskrt Maharajah's College, Mysore, 1940	•	0
24.	SĀMĀNYA VEDĀNTA UPANISADS—Translated into English by T. R. Srinivasa Aiyangar, B.A., L.T., and Pandit S. Subrahmanya Sastri, F.T.S., 1941		. 0
25.	BHAGAVADGITĀRTHAPRAKĀSIKĀ of Upanisad Brahmayogin (Samskṛt). Edited by the Pandits of the Adyar Library with an Introduction by Dr. C. Kunhan Raja, M.A., D.Phil. (Oxon.), 1941		. 0
26.	SAMAVEDA-SAMHITĀ—With the Commentaries of Mādhava and Bharatasvāmin. Edited by Dr. C. Kunhan Raja, M.A., D. Phil (Oxon.), 1941		•
27.	Rāja Dharma (Dewan Bahadur K. Krishnaswami Rao Lectures, 1938, University of Madras) by Rao Bahadur K. V. Rangaswam Aiyangar, M.A., 1941	i i
28.	VARIVASYĀRAHASYAM of Bhāsurānandanātha (2nd Edition) by Pandit S. Subramanya Sastri, F.T.S. (with English Translation) 1941	, ,
	* Published under the auspices of the Adyar Library Associate	ion.

- 29. VYAVAHÄRANIRŅAYA OF VARADARÄJA—Edited by Rao Bahadur K. V. Rangaswami Aiyangar, M.A., and A. N. Krishna Aiyangar, M.A., L.T., Jt. Editor, Brahmavidyā, Adyar Library, 1941
- SANGİTARATNĀKARA—With the Commentaries of Catura Kallinātha and Simhabhupāla. Edited by Pandit S. Subrahmanya Sastri, F.T.S., Vol. I, 1941 ...

PAMPHLETS

-A VARIANT VERSION OF THE EKÄGNIKÄNDA (Reprinted from the Adyar Library Bulletin, October, 1939). Edited by K. Madhava Krishna Sarma, M.O.L. ... 0 3

THE REMAINSTANCE OF BHOJA (Reprinted from the Adyar Library Lillians, Computer, 1940). Edited by K. Madhava Krishna Sarma, M.O.L. ... 0 4

IN THE PRESS

- AS'VALAYANAGRHYA-SÜTRA—With Devasvämi Bhäşya—Edited by Swami Ravi Tirtha.
- ÄSVALAYANAGRHYA-SDTRA (Bhāṣya of Devasvāmi). Translated into English by Λ. N. Krishna Aiyangar, M.A., L.T., Jt. Editor, Brahmavidvā, Adyar Library.
- JIVĀNANDANAM OF ĀNANDARĀYAMAKHI with a Commentary by Vaidyaratna M. Duraiswami Aiyangar. Edited by Vaidyaratna G. Srinivasa Murti, B.A., B.L., M.B. & C. M. and Vaidyaratna Pandit M. Duraiswami Aiyangar.
- S'rī PĀÑCARĀTRA RAKṣĀ of S'rī Vedānta Des'ika—Edited by Vaidyaratna M. Duraiswami Aiyangar and Vedānta S'iromani T. Venugopalacharya.
- ÄLAMBANAPARĪĶĶĀ AND VŖTTI by Dinnāga. With the Commentary of Dharmapāla. Edited by Pandit N. Aiyaswami Sastri.
- 6. VAISNAVA UPANISADS—Translated into English by T. R. Srinivasa Aiyangar B.A., L.T. and Pandit S. Subrahmanya Sastri, F.T.S.
- A DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE of the Manuscripts in the Adyar Library by K. Madhava Krishna Sarma, M.O.L., under the direction of Prof. C. Kunhan Raja, M.A., D. Phil. (Oxon.)—Vedic.
- USĀŅIRUDDHO of Rāma Pāṇivāda. Edited by Pandit S. Subrahmanya. Sastri, F.T.S. and Dr. C. Kunhan Raja, M.A., D. Phil. (Oxon.).
- Some Concepts in Alankāra Sāstra by Dr. V. Raghavan M.A., Ph. D.
- Nyāyakusumāñjali of Udayanācārya—Translated into English by Swami Ravi Tirtha.
- THE APASTAMBASMRTI—Edited by A. N. Krishna Aiyangar, M.A., L.T., Joint Editor, Brahmavidyā, Adyar Library.
- THE ACYUTARĀYĀBHYUDAYAM of Rājanātha Dindima—Sargas 7 to 12 by A. N. Krishna Aiyangar, M.A., L.T., Adyar Library.

Agents for our publications:

THE THEOSOPHICAL PUBLISHING HOUSE Adyar, Madras, S. India

WORKS UNDER THE PREPARATION

- CATURDAS'ALAKSANI OF GADADHARA with Five Commentaries—Edited by Pandit N. Santanam Aiyer.
- 2. GAUTMASMRTI—Edited by A. N. Krishna Aiyangar, M.A., L.T., Joint Editor, Brahmavidyā, Advar Library.
- THE KALADARS'A OF ADITYA BHATTA—Edited by Rao Bahadur K. V. Rangaswami Aiyangar, M.A., and A. N. Krishna Aiyangar, M.A., L.T., Joint Editor, Brahmavidya, Adyar Library.
- THE VISNUSMETI—With the Kes'ava Vaijayanti of Nanda Pandita Edited by Rao Bahadur K. V. Rangaswami Aiyangar, M.A., and A. N. Krishna Aiyangar, M.A., L.T., Adyar Library.

BRAHMAVIDYĀ

THE ADYAR LIBRARY BULLETIN

Editor: Prof. C. Kunhan Raja, M.A., D.Phil. (Oxon.)

Jt. Editor: A. N. KRISHNA AIYANGAR. M.A., L.T.

Life Subscription Rs. 100

Rates of Subscription:

	or	$ 50
•	or	£ 10
		Per Annum	Single Copy
India & Ceylon		Rs. 6	Rs. 2-8
U. S. A.		$ 3	$. 1.25
British Empire		Sh. 12	Sh. 5
Other Countries		Rs. 9	Rs. 3-8

All Communications to be addressed to:

THE DIRECTOR,

Adyar Library,

Adyar, Madras, S. India.

Parties and the second of the

D.G.A. 80.

CENTRAL ARCHAEOLOGICAL LIBRARY NEW DELHI Issue record

Call No.— 294.6/Aiy - 8187

Author- Aiyangar, K.V. Rangaswami.

Rājadharma. Title-

Borrower's Name Date of Issue Date of Return

"A book that is shut is but a block"

A COUNT OF INDIA NEW DELHI.

Please help us to keep the book clean and moving.